LOS ANGELES, Jan. 24. NEWS OF LOS ANGELES harbor activities, supplied by Joseph Toplitzky are encouraging. While the total United States sale abroad fell off more than one billion dollars in 1930, exports from Los Angeles harbor increased, bringing in $140,000,000. This neighborhood sells to foreigners two and a half times the amount it buys from them.

HARVEY FIRESTONE, pushing sales by energetic advertising, has put his Los Angeles factory on a 24-hour basis, of three eight-hour shifts. Airplanes with their big tires and automobiles, including millions of them from other states, run here all through the winter. This is the place for a tire factory, or any other factory that wants good weather and abundance of competent labor, all the year around.

THE UNITED STATES Rubber Company, realizing what Los Angeles and its harbor mean to manufacturing and distributing, including its nearness to the world's rubber plantations, has bought the Samson Tire and Rubber Company there, and will produce tires for the Pacific Coast, on a big scale.

TO KEEP BUSINESS at home, factories will soon open in Salinas Valley, north of here, to make rubber of the guayule plant, of which many thousands of acres are under cultivation, 6,000 acres now ready for harvesting. Whether home grown rubber or substitutes for rubber can be produced profitably at present rubber prices, in competition with Asiatic labor, remains to be seen. Improved harvesting machinery may offset the difference in labor cost.

EVIDENCE IN a murder trial starting on the Morongo Indian Reservation, illustrates energetic action of prohibition officials. The Indians, in their house, were conducting a religious ceremonial, called a period of meditation, in memory of departed relatives. It is suspected that Indians sometimes use alcoholic liquors in connection with religious services. All witnesses agree that two agents kicked in the door of the Indian dwelling, with pistols in their hands, no search warrant.

A 19-YEAR-OLD Indian boy, Charlie Hyde, accused of murder, testified that Oscar E. Olsen, dry agent, pursued him with his pistol, pointing a flash light at him as he ran. Hyde shot and killed the agent as his Indian mother tried to run between the two men.

LAWYERS FOR THE defense might have suggested to the honorable court that if Indians use liquid in religious ceremonies, they have no monopoly of that practice. Protestants, Catholics and Jews use it also, and the prohibition makes exceptions in their favor. They, through their clergy, may buy, for religious use, any kind of liquor. The white man knows that his Supreme Being requires the use of alcohol as part of religious ceremony might not the Indians Supreme Being feel the same need of it.

IN ANY CASE, when men, without warning and fully armed, kick down the door, even of a humble Indian, they run risks. No dry agent should be shot, unless in absolute self-defense. But doors should not be kicked in without legal warrant, and if three kinds of religion demand liquor and are allowed to have it, there seems no good reason for discriminating against a fourth or fifth religion. Under our constitution, all religions and all gods are supposed to have the same standing and are entitled to complete respect.

IN CUBA VARIOUS newspapers have been suspended and their publication forbidden in a political urgency. These newspapers include El Mundo of Havana, in which this column, translated into Spanish, has been published daily for many years. The writer greatly regrets even temporary loss of an intellectual Cuban audience, and respectfully suggests to the Cuban government, that suppression of newspapers is a very archaic method of sustaining authority.

THE ENLIGHTENED constitution of Cuba forbids it and the suppression of newspapers is based upon a Spanish law enacted in 1870 and since then repealed by Spain. No sensible outsider would venture to criticize the action of a friendly government. But freedom of the press is a great safeguard, as important as electric light in great cities, and the absence of it is dangerous, as proved in Russia and elsewhere. The Czar forbade it, but he no longer rules. Bolshevism forbids it and also will regret it.

NEW YORK WISE men and women, including home enlightened educators, decide that moving pictures do for education what books cannot do. That is no exaggeration, and the statement interests this picture metropolis. Men have taken information through their eyes for forty million years, as men, so Prof. Osborne, of the Museum of Natural History, tells us. And for hundreds of millions of years our animal predecessors took in all knowledge through the eyes, and warning through the ears.

OUR EYES AND EARS are still our real educators. A child does not forget what he has seen. He does forget what he has read or what has been said to him. A picture of Lincoln's

THIRD FUND FOR NEEDY PROPOSED

Decision to Handle Welfare Work Through Municipal Bureaus Follows Parley.

Herron Discloses Plan, But Refrains From Revealing New Appropriation Total.

A third fund for aid of the city's destitute and unemployed is provided in a resolution to be introduced in Council tomorrow by President John S. Herron.

City employes will handle the project, Mr. Herron said.

AMOUNT SECRET

Amount of the proposed appropriation was not divulged. Herron said statisticians were working on the city funds to determine just how much could be spared and from what accounts it could be taken.

Two other appropriations of $100,000 each for relief have been spent over a period of about three months.

Two councilmanic appropriations of $250,000 each on public works improvement are also to be introduced at the meeting. These will provide work for many men over an extended period and have the backing of the City Department of Public Works.

Herron said:

"We feel that if we provide work, it will be more satisfactory than the present method, which has proven very unsatisfactory, very expensive. We hope to have the necessary legislation in shape for Monday's meeting which will in our judgment relieve this condition.

"We can have the employes from other city departments

Allow Sunday Shows To Relieve Needy

NORFOLK, Va., Jan. 24.—(AP.)—Sunday motion picture performances as a means to raise funds for relief of unemployed today had the sanction of City Manager Truxton. The first of a series of Sunday pictures will start in February unless protesting ministers devise an equally effective plan for raising money in some other way.

Aimee Takes Rest, Leaves for East

LOS ANGELES, Cal., Jan. 24.—(INS.)—Aimee Semple McPherson, evangelist head of Angelus Temple today was en route East to an unannounced destination to take another rest cure far from her church. Mrs. McPherson boarded an eastbound train with her daughter, Roberta, and temple workers said they probably would go to the home of friends in New Hampshire.

1 OF 4 WORKERS JOBLESS HERE

WASHINGTON, Jan. 24.—(AP.)—Unemployment in the United States during the first week of December was estimated today by the President's committee for employment to have affected between 4,500,000 and 5,000,000 persons, or about 10 per cent of the population which usually is gainfully occupied.

Col. Arthur Woods, head of the committee, said the estimate was based upon a special census taken by the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company through its agencies in 46 selected cities, which was used as a basis for calculations for the entire country.

According to F. H. Ecker, president of the Metropolitan, the rate for larger cities, including Pittsburgh, Philadelphia, certain boroughs of New York and Los Angeles ran from 20 to 25 per cent.

The survey's account covering Pittsburgh was as follows:

"Families visited, 5,536; persons in families, 23,475; wage or salary earners, 8,905; employed full-time, 4,525; employed part-time, 2,196; wholly unemployed, 2,181; percentage employed full-time, 50.8; percentage employed part-time, 24.7; percentage wholly unemployed, 24.5; average family size, 4.2; wage or salary earners per family, 1.6."

It's Not Too Late to Enter $3,000 Pershing Contest

Notwithstanding the fact that Pershing's own story of the World War has been running in the Sun-Telegraph two weeks, it is not too late to enter the $3,000 cash prize educational contest appearing coincidently with the narrative.

On Page 12 of Sunday's Sun-Telegraph readers will find the first three questions of a series of 10 to be asked during the publication of the story. On the same page there is a complete synopsis of all that has gone before in this story, and the reader, by careful study, can find the answers to the first three questions in this synopsis.

The $3,000 in prizes in this fascinating contest is divided into total awards of $500 for each of six groups or classes in history.

There will be $500 for grade school children, $500 for college students, $500 for high school pupils, $500 for school teachers and clergymen, $500 for members of the American Legion and other veteran organizations, and $500 for all other readers not included in the above groups. There is no age limit for entrants.

On Page 7, Part 2 of today's Sunday Sun-Telegraph readers will find the rules of the Pershing tests. Read them carefully—enter today.

WOMAN QUITS U. S. POST; FARO SWINDLE CAUSE

Mrs. Blacklidge Bitterly Denies Litsinger Charge She Aided $50,000 Fraud.

CHICAGO, Jan. 24.—(AP.)—Mrs. Myrtle Tanner Blacklidge resigned as collector of the internal revenue for Northern Illinois today.

It was the culmination of the $50,000 faro swindle of Springfield, Ill., into which she said she was innocently drawn. In sending her curt relinquishment to Washington she brought to a close the federal investigation into the charges made by Edward R. Litsinger, member of the Cook County board of review, that she was a party to a plot by which he was mulcted out of $50,000 which he had lent her. If prosecution is to be made as a result of Litsinger's accusations, it must come from city and county authorities.

Claiming innocence of any wrongdoing, disclaiming any part in the swindle and turning bitterly on Litsinger, Mrs. Blacklidge gave out a statement from a downtown hospital. She had been in hiding since Thursday, and under care of a physician.

DO-X Makes First Test Since Blaze

LISBON, Jan. 24.—(Universal.)—The giant Dornier DO-X, scheduled to hop off for New York via South America at the end of the month, was taken aloft for a two-hour test flight over this city today. It was the seaplane's first hop since the reconstruction of the wing burned to a skeleton two months ago. Capt. Friedrich Christiansen was in command.

Gen. Edwards Still Gaining in Hospital

BOSTON, Jan. 24.—(INS.)—Maj. Gen. Clarence R. Edwards, war-time commander of the 26th (Yankee) Division, today continued to maintain gradual improvement in his condition, following an emergency operation for an intestinal disorder 10 days ago. At Phillips House, Massachusetts General Hospital, the general was reported today as "slightly improved, resting comfortably and sleeping well."

Rector His Foe, Pinchot Goes to Another Church

HARRISBURG, Jan. 24.—Gov. and Mrs. Gifford Pinchot will attend the Grace Methodist Episcopal Church tomorrow, the church whose congregation has been well-informed on political reforms to which the chief executive subscribes. The pastor, Dr. Robert Bagnell, is a militant churchman who has taken part in election law campaigns and other social-political movements.

The announcement today by P. Stephen Stahlnecker, Pinchot's secretary, confirmed the opinion that the Governor would change churches. He attended St. Stephen's Episcopal Church during his previous term as governor, but the present rector of this congregation was included in the list of the local liberal party committee supporting Hemphill.

PRISON RIOTERS DISARM GUARDS

JEFFERSON CITY, Mo., Jan. 24.—(AP.)—Officials and guards of the Missouri Penitentiary tonight broke up an attempted riot in "I" Hall, the "hard boiled prison" inside the penitentiary, within a short time after the trouble broke out.

The trouble started about 6:30 p. m., a few hours before the annual governor's military ball was to begin at the state capital. At 7:45 p. m. penitentiary officials announced the outbreak was quelled, with three convicts injured.

It was learned four convicts apparently were the only ones in the plot. As Guard Capt. Frank Wehmever walked by the cell house entrance, one of them placed an improvised knife to his ribs, commanding him to surrender his gun.

Guard D. C. Bailey rushed to investigate and was met by a knife and a gun. He also surrendered his weapon.

Heading for the wall, the four men shouted to Guard W. H. Simmons to "Stick 'em up." Instead he fired at them, wounding three of the men slightly. They turned and raced back to the cell house.

In the meantime, Assistant Night Yardmaster O. F. Douglas noticed the red trouble light. As he neared the entrance one of the quartet covered him and pulled him inside.

Douglas got the keys away from the convicts, and the three guards got into a tunnel for safety. The quartet rushed upstairs to a bathroom and barricaded themselves. When guards arrived with submachine guns, sawed off shotguns and gas bombs the rioters surrendered.

Politicians Year Ahead, Can't Be Bothered Today

—By ARTHUR 'BUGS' BAER—

Does he think or does he only think so?

Everything they do in Washington now is done with one bright eye on 1932.

Next year is the presidential year.

That happens once every four years.

The other three years we forget we have a president.

Both the Republicans and Democrats would like to get together and help the nation, which seems to be doing pretty well with them apart.

The politicians are always looking a year ahead. Which is tough when we want something today.

If you ask your senator about next October he says:

"Sorry, but I'm way up to next December."

Which answer eliminates you from the tournament and indi-

DRYS CONSENT TO REFERENDUM PLANK BY G. O. P.

Four Per Cent Beer Argued, Senate Hears President 'Inspired' Revision Plea.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 24.—If President Hoover yields to the earnest entreaties of some of his closest advisers—and there are many who believe he will—the Republican platform upon which he will stand for re-election in 1932 will contain a plank calling for resubmission of the Eighteenth Amendment to constitutional conventions called by the various states.

It would not be a referendum of the people in the popular sense, but a referendum of the states as units. The moderate drys are willing to go along on such a proposition. They are confident that although they might be beaten in a popular referendum they can triumph in such state-by-state contests.

4 PER CENT BEER URGED

Meanwhile, amid debate over whether President Hoover favored modification of the dry laws to make them less or more stringent, the Senate today approached the first vote it has had on 4 per cent beer since national prohibition became effective.

During the debate, charges were heard that President Hoover was secretly inspiring Washington correspondents to write articles he had "not closed the door" on revision of the Eighteenth Amendment or modifying the Volstead act, after he had taken a "bone dry" stand in his message to Congress on the Wickersham report.

These charges, brought to the attention of the Senate by Sen-

Former Kaiser 72, Fete to Lack Pomp

DOORN, Holland, Jan. 24.—(AP.)—Wilhelm Hohenzollern, woodchopper of Doorn, will be 72 on Tuesday, but the celebration will be just a quiet unpretentious family affair such as any other elderly country gentleman might have.

There will be none of the ceremony used to mark the birthday of the Emperor of Germany. Only divine services in the morning, a family dinner at noon and in the evening a formal dinner.

Mussolini Cuts Hard Into Police Budget

ROME, Jan. 24.—(AP.)—Premier Mussolini in his economy campaign today trimmed more than $500,000 from the budgetary provision for his fund for "political investigation." The item occurred in the budget for national police expenses and the economy effected reduced that budget to just more than $1,000,000.

Silver Thieves Loot Dr. Eckener's Home

FRIEDRICHSHAFEN, Germany, Jan. 24.—(AP.)—Dr. Hugo Eckener and his household were eating from borrowed spoons and forks today. Burglars broke into his house Thursday night and stole all his silver plate, stamped with his name, and about $400 worth of American, English and Swiss coins.

SHAKEN UP

MRS. WOODROW WILSON

MRS. WILSON IN COLLISION

WASHINGTON, Jan. 24.—(AP.)—Mrs. Woodrow Wilson, widow of the war time President, was shaken up, but uninjured today in a collision between her automobile and a street car.

At the Wilson home, it was said the automobile was but slightly damaged. Following the accident the chauffeur drove the car home under its own power.

Woodcock Travels Despite Illness

SALISBURY, Md., Jan. 24.—(AP.)—Despite an attack apparently of grippe or influenza which yesterday at Binghamton, N. Y., sent his temperature to 102 degrees, Amos W. W. Woodcock, national prohibition director, traveled here today by train, unaccompanied.

He arrived this afternoon for a visit at the home of his sisters, Mrs. T. E. Martindale and Miss Wilsie Woodcock. His brother-in-law, Dr. George W. Todd, is a physician, and neither he nor the others seemed concerned over Mr. Woodcock's condition.

Einsteins on Way To Desert Vacation

PASADENA, Cal., Jan. 24.—(AP.)—The Einsteins left today for a desert vacation motoring to Palm Springs in the Northern Coachella Valley of Imperial County. Prof. Albert Einstein, Frau Elsa, his wife; Dr. Walther Mayer, his scientific companion, and Fraulein Helen Dukas, Mrs. Einstein's secretary, were in the party. They will be guests until Tuesday of Samuel Untermyer, New York attorney, at his summer home, The Willows.

FIND BODIES OF 3 WOMEN IN WRECKAGE

Engineer, Fireman Killed, 21 Passengers Hurt as Southern Train Overturns.

Doctors, Nurses Sent from Tennessee Town; Debris Blocks Track for Hours.

HELENWOOD, Tenn., Jan. 24.—(AP.)—The Suwanee River Special of the Southern Railway was derailed near here at 12:35 p. m. today and late this afternoon five bodies had been taken from the wreckage.

The names of four of the dead were given at Somerset, Ky., division headquarters of the road, as Harry Lindle, 50, engineer, Somerset, Ky.; Charles Gexton, 40, fireman, Somerset; Mrs. Charles D. Rineheart, Pasadena, Cal., and Mrs. Logan Cowgill, Indianapolis, Ind., and Tampa, Fla., and Mrs. J. C. Markey, Cleveland, O.

21 INJURED

The Somerset dispatcher's office said six persons were reported injured seriously and 15 others hurt slightly.

The names of 10 injured were announced at the dispatcher's office here late today as follows:

Charles E. Rinehart, Pasadena, Cal.; Carl Gerner, Cleveland, O.; Samuel Gildar, Cleveland; May Kelley, Chicago; Lillian Martin, Chicago; J. Thompson Greenville, S. C.; Thomas C. Harrington, Garner, Mass.; William Hammell, Cincinnati, O.; H. F. Collins, Halifax, Nova Scotia; Mrs. Lucile Cooper, address unknown.

The injured were sent to hospitals at Chattanooga and Rockwood, Tenn., and it was reported here half a dozen were in a serious condition.

P. Rainey, Southern Railway roadmaster at Somerset, arrived here soon after the wreck and took charge of clearing the right of way. He said the tracks could not be cleared before tomorrow morning.

ALL CARS DERAILED

The Suwanee River Special, running from Detroit, Chicago, Cleveland and Cincinnati for points on the Florida West Coast, left the tracks at a curve one mile south of here, and crashed onto a stone ledge bordering the rails. Various reports said the train was made up of from seven to 11 cars, all of which left the rails.

Relief crews of doctors and nurses were sent from Helenwood, Oneida and Oakdale, Tenn. The dead and seriously injured were brought to Helenwood.

The wreck dismantled the wire communication system to nearby towns, and it was several hours before details became known.

Railroad officials were unable to give the cause of the wreck.

Traffic Court Bailiff Tells Justice Stone to Sit Down

WASHINGTON, Jan. 24.—(AP.)—Associate Justice Stone, of the Supreme Court, unrecognized in a crowd at the District of Columbia Traffic Court, today was ordered by a bailiff to "find a seat."

Later, because of a recent decision of his court that persons charged with reckless driving could demand a jury trial, he was told to come back February 12 as complaining witness against a Negro whose machine crashed into the automobile of the justice.

Standing by the jury box in traffic court and obscured by a group of lawyers, Justice Stone was included with a group of others when Judge Hitt told the bailiff to "see that those men sit down."

The Supreme Court decided last November that reckless driving was an offense that should be tried by a jury, as compared to minor offenses where a jury was not needed.

ROTHSTEIN PAL STABBED, NIGHT CLUB WRECKED

80 Patrons Flee as Bullets Fly in Mysterious Attack On Luxurious N. Y. Abbey

NEW YORK, Jan. 24.—(AP)—Through [illegible] a Broadway [illegible] cigaret girl police hoped tonight to solve a gun battle which raged at dawn in the luxurious Club Abbey and in which a night club owner was stabbed, shot and beaten.

Mary King [illegible] haired peddler of cigarets to the free-spending patrons of the club, took the [illegible] wounded man, Charles Sherman, 32, to a hospital and told police she had found him in the street in front of the club in West Fifty-fourth street.

CLUB WRECKED

But detectives found the club a wreck. The walls had been perforated with bullets, the furnishings were stained with blood and many of the tables and chairs had been overturned. Two automatic pistols, their clips emptied, were found on the floor.

The driver of the cab in which Sherman had been taken to the hospital told of hearing the cigaret girl mutter:

"We'll get them yet. We'll get them yet, Charles."

Under questioning by the police Miss King admitted her story of finding Sherman on the sidewalk was untrue and said the attack occurred in the club.

VICTIM AT TABLE

She said Sherman was sitting at a table with several men and women, but when the shooting started she could not see his table. She was held for further examination.

Sherman, well known in "big time" gambling circles on Long Island, insisted he was attacked by two men outside the club. He was stabbed in the face, shoulders, arms and hands, had three bullet wounds in his arms and bruises all over his body, apparently from blows and kicks.

Some 80 men and women in the club fled pell-mell into the street when the battle started.

Sherman has been connected with various club enterprises. For some years he mingled with the late Arnold Rothstein, the late Frank Marlowe, George McManus, Larry Fay and other well-known Broadway characters, the police said.

The Club Abbey, managed by Louis and Artie Schwartz, has frequently figured in police reports because of fights in the place.

Dollie Removed From Child's Lung

[illegible]TIMORE, Jan. 24.—(AP)—[illegible]nen, 10-year-old Beatrice, swallowed her doll her dis[illegible] parents sent her to St. Agnes Hospital. Today the doll was removed. A tiny thing of china, it had lodged in her left lung and was removed by means of a bronchoscope. Neither Beatrice nor the doll will be the worse for the experience, the doctors said.

Callao Has First Daylight Holdup

CALLAO, Peru, Jan. 24.—(AP)—In the first spectacular daylight holdup in the history of Callao three masked men today halted the paymaster for a British-owned flour mill and escaped with about $500 in gold. The holdup took place in a sparsely populated street.

JESSIE MATTHEWS

EVELYN LAYE'S EX-MATE WEDS

LONDON, Jan. 24.—(INS)—Another chapter in a famous "change-about" romance of the British stage was enacted here today when Jessie Matthews, internationally-known British musical comedy star was married to Sonnie Hale, her leading man in a number of recent productions.

Miss Laye

Hale formerly was the husband of Evelyn Laye, another dazzling British star of the footlights.

Miss Laye's divorce from Hale was made absolute early this week by the British courts.

The marital affairs of Miss Matthews and Miss Laye have attracted international attention for months. Miss Matthews obtained a divorce from her first husband some months ago, taking the unusual course of admitting her own infidelity and informing the judge she wished the divorce in order that she might marry Hale as soon as his matrimonial ties with Evelyn Laye were severed.

Miss Laye then sued Hale for divorce, naming Miss Matthews as co-respondent.

JOBLESS MARCH AS 8 GOVERNORS DISCUSS RELIEF

Roosevelt Quits Conference To Hear Pleas; 200 Start Long Walk to White House

ALBANY, Jan. 24.—(INS)—Gov. Franklin D. Roosevelt today conferred with a delegation of unemployed who earlier had marched around the executive offices while Roosevelt and the governors of seven eastern states were discussing the economic situation.

The unemployed were received by Guernsey T. Cross, secretary to the governor, who told Michael Pell that Roosevelt was engaged in a conference but would see representatives later. He explained that the conference had nothing to do with unemployment [illegible] affairs.

DELEGATES CONFER

The delegation departed, but a short time later two representatives were received and were closeted with Roosevelt for 10 minutes.

Afterward Pell said:

"We presented our demands to Gov. Roosevelt and told him that all we wanted was jobs."

BANNERS STATE DEMANDS

The banners carried by the unemployed paraders read:

"Governors: Less talk and more action. We refuse to starve."

"We demand $25 a week for all married unemployed."

"Open armories for the unemployed."

"Give unemployed free light, gas and coal."

Gov. Gifford Pinchot of Pennsylvania, unable to attend, was represented by Dr. Charles Reitell of Pittsburgh, recently named director of the Greater Pennsylvania Commission.

Jobless Vet Marchers' Ranks Dwindle Fast

CHESTER, Pa., Jan. 24.—(AP)—Tired and footsore, 34 marchers who said they were unemployed war veterans arrived in Chester late today from Philadelphia, where they set out with the avowed intention of tramping to Washington to ask Congress to speed legislation for the relief of unemployed soldiers.

The Rev. J. Frank Baker, in charge of the Chester Rescue Mission, met the marchers as they assembled in front of city hall. He provided beds for the night and supper and breakfast.

The number of marchers dwindled on the road here. About 200 started from Independence Square in Philadelphia. Three miles out, and while still in Philadelphia, their number had dropped to 50. At Darby the line was down to 40.

Leaders said a number of the marchers had been taken toward Washington by motorists. They said they expected other veterans to join their ranks between Chester and Washington.

Little Rock Police Balk Food Rioting

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Jan. 24.—(INS)—Local officers today broke up what was believed an attempt to cause a "food riot" in Little Rock.

Frank Brown, said to be of Kansas City, and X. Zini, of North Little Rock, were arrested following the distribution of circulars calling for a mass meeting this afternoon and bearing the legends "Poverty and Hunger" and "Fight Don't Starve."

Hunt Driver Who Ran Down Man

Police last night were seeking a hit-skip driver who ran down Alex Green, 22, of 80 Crawford street. Green was in a serious condition in the Passavant Hospital suffering from body hurts. The accident occurred at Center avenue and Morgan street. Police said the car bore an Ohio license.

SERIOUSLY ILL ABROAD

PITTSBURGH NOVELIST—Ida Vera Simonton, Pittsburgh writer, on whose novel, "Hell's Playground," the successful play "White Cargo" was based, is dangerously ill in a hospital at Antwerp, Belgium, her brother, J. A. Simonton, visiting in Miami, has been informed by the U. S. consul.

City Officials to Handle Relief

help out in the work. Policemen can do their share, and so can the others throughout the city bureaus, if it is necessary."

The bond ordinances which the councilmen hope to get through as expeditiously as possible so that needy men can receive work, include one for $250,000 for Manchester river-rail improvements, and a second of a like amount for improvement of the Diamond Market, widening of Seventh avenue at the Gulf Refining Company Building, erection of a garage at the East End asphalt plant and improvement of the Murdock entrance of Schenley Park.

DOUBT EFFECTIVENESS

The plan to have the Welfare Department handle the further distribution of aid will not be entirely effective, officials of organizations which have been co-operating with the department in the past, believe.

Maj. Herbert Smith, in charge of relief work for the Salvation Army here, when informed of Herron's plans, said:

"The money collected by the Salvation Army in its drive has been nearly depleted. I hardly think the city will be able to accomplish as much good as heretofore if it dispenses with the services of the outside field workers. It was the welfare organizations which bore the brunt of expense in hiring investigators.

MISS HANSON COMMENTS

Miss Eleanor Hanson, of the Family Welfare Association, commenting on the plan, asserted:

"Welfare investigations must be made by experienced workers. It isn't possible to build up a staff of investigators who are wholly experienced. I think the city will make a big mistake in dispensing with those loaned it by the outside associations. However, it will be a big saving to the groups.

Herron announced sometime ago that $25,000 was available for creation of a job-giving plan for Pittsburgh. This project has as its idea an appropriation of the $25,000 by Council, with other amounts donated by public-spirited citizens. It is likely some action will be taken on this plan too, tomorrow, although no definite statement to that end was made.

Federal Grand Jury Has Special Session

Members of the November federal grand jury will reconvene tomorrow for a special session. United States Attorney Louis E. Graham has listed 140 cases for investigation, involving 170 persons.

More than 75 per cent of the cases are for actions under the Jones "five-and-ten" prohibition law. Other investigations concern violations of the bankruptcy act and narcotic law. Trials in criminal cases will start February 16.

The purpose of the special session is to lighten the regular May term of court, it was said.

Chapters Feeding 603,499; Senator Denounces House Delay of Further Help

WASHINGTON, Jan. 24.—(AP.)—While the relief issue was agitated anew in the Senate, the Red Cross today reported contributions in excess of $400,000 as a result of the nation-wide radio broadcast Thursday night for donations to its $10,000,000 fund.

The total to date was $1,670,952.

Red Cross chapters were reported feeding 603,499 persons in 343 counties in 21 states as of noon Friday.

In the previous 24 hours, the number had jumped by 16,465.

SENATE SCORES DELAY

The House Appropriations Committee was criticized at the outset of the Senate session by Senator Caraway for delaying the proposed $25,000,000 appropriation to the Red Cross by holding hearings. The taking of testimony begins Monday. The Senate has approved the fund.

Caraway asserted:

"For what purpose they are holding hearings, I don't know. The situation has been gone over thoroughly."

He cited the radio appeals from President Hoover, former President Coolidge and others as evidence of the need.

FILIBUSTER DENIED

Meanwhile, Acting Chairman Cramton, of the House Appropriations Committee, said "the very existence" of the Red Cross was involved in matters affecting consideration of the $25,000,000 appropriation.

After a conference at the White House with President Hoover, the Michigan representative said the hearings would be conducted as expeditiously as possible.

While Democratic spokesmen have mentioned "deliberate delay" by administrative leaders, Cramton asserted there was "no filibuster."

MIX TO APPEAL $90,000 AWARD

ERIE, Pa., Jan. 24.—(AP.)—Counsel for Tom Mix, screen and circus cowboy, tonight were studying records with a view to appeal in a breach of contract suit in which a jury today decided against Mix to the extent of $90,000.

The plaintiff was Col. Zack Miller, owner of the 101 Ranch Shows, who sued the cowboy for $325,000, claiming Mix broke a verbal agreement to join his show in 1929. Mix admitted he discussed such a connection, but felt free to sign with others because no agreement had been reached.

Mix left here today to spend the week-end with his mother, Mrs. Eva Mix, at DuBois, Pa., who is confined to her home with a fractured ankle.

VAUCLAIN HEARD ON DAVIS FUND DISCREPANCIES

Denies Any Interest to Hide Facts; State Statute Violated, Nye Hints.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 24.—Samuel Vauclain, chairman of the board of the Baldwin Locomotive Works, and treasurer of the Davis-Brown primary campaign committee, of Philadelphia, today explained to the Nye committee the discrepancies between expenditures he reported and those subsequently revealed through the state of Pennsylvania. He testified:

"I had no intention to keep from you any information you may have desired. It was impossible for me to have reported to you amounts subsequently reported to the state.

UNPAID BILLS

"When I made the report to you I reported everything that I had knowledge of that had passed through my hands. I had $131,287.46 and unpaid bills totaling $129,693. I did not give you the list of unpaid bills because I believed it was incomplete and I was not asked for it."

Senator Nye raised a question whether officers of the Davis-Brown campaign committee complied with the state law requiring handling of all campaign funds by the treasurer.

The Pennsylvania state law on the subject was read, then Nye asked Vauclain:

"With that the law, did not those who made these expenditures on behalf of the committee act in violation of the law?"

Remarking he was not a lawyer, Vauclain said he did not know.

At the start of the hearing today, Joseph E. Davies, chief counsel for Davis, presented a copy of a statement made by Ralph H. Frank and Howard W. Bennett, in connection with their testimony yesterday relative to alleged fraud discovered in the opening of 64 ballot boxes in Allegheny County following the primary.

MISCOUNT VOTE SMALL

The statement, termed a "stipulation" by Davis, read in part as follows:

"The irregularities so far as miscount was concerned in the senatorial election as between Davis and Grundy (former Senator Joseph R. Grundy) was less than one per cent of the total vote cast."

Senator Nye said he had requested Judge James R. Macfarlane, of the Allegheny County Common Pleas Court, to hold the boxes for the committee's disposal. Saying he was not certain the committee would want to delve further into that phase of the case, Nye explained he merely wanted the boxes available in the event such a course was decided upon.

Pinchot Girds for Assembly Battle Over Program

CHEAPER ROADS FOR TOWNSHIPS, GOVERNOR'S AIM

'More Mileage for Money' Taken as Slap at Brick Maker, Foe at Election.

By E. W. PRENDERGAST
Staff Correspondent.

HARRISBURG, Jan. 24.—A governor more experienced, more conscious of the pitfalls of politics and the necessity of playing the game, friends and enemies agreed, tomorrow will lay his plans for what may become his bitterest battle.

Eight years ago, Gov. Pinchot pushed over his administration bills almost with unanimity. Tomorrow night, with the Legislature divided, with the Philadelphia "war board" united against him and bolstered by several senators from other counties, he will begin through his Senate leaders the battle for all the things he has sponsored since his candidacy was announced.

Already, it has been pointed out, he is making use of political experience gained in his previous administration. One instance is the taking over of the 20,000 miles of township roads and the enunciation of a principle that he is opposed to spending large sums of money for short stretches, but rather wants big mileage for the money spent.

Taken to indicate that his policy will be towards macadam or stone country roads ranging between $6,000 and $10,000 a mile it was presumed that this will mean the end of concrete roads, at least for townships.

CHEAPER ROADS

It was estimated that highways of heavy concrete or brick requiring a cement base cost approximately $50,000 a mile, a sum interpreted widely as outside the Pinchot term "considerable mileage for the money available," and inside his expression, "I am opposed to spending large sums of money for short stretches of road."

Heavy contributions made by a brick manufacturer in the primary, and not made to the Pinchot forces, may have had some influence, one political figure remarked.

With about 500 bills being prepared for the coming sessions by the Legislative Reference Bureau, which drafts the bills for members, only a few are known to be ready for immediate presentation in the Senate and House. In the sessions last Monday and Tuesday, 120 bills were dropped in the House hopper, but those in the Senate were delayed because the chairmanships and committees were not named in time. One bill for the codification of election laws, except the law governing voting machines, will be presented by Senator Frank J. Harris, of Pittsburgh. The codification will not change materially any of the existing laws. A second law proposing drastic reforms in the election laws, now being considered through the State Election Association, may be presented later.

SENATE STRENGTH

With the real battle to be fought in the Senate, the Pinchot group expects to hold its 22 Republican votes of the Daix-Mansfield test for president pro tempore, and possibly the four Democratic votes, which would give it a majority. The Philadelphia group showed 24 for Daix. On the prohibition question, however, administration leaders have suggested that the Mansfield-Daix alignment would be broken.

What administration bills will be filed and who will sponsor them in either Senate or House was not divulged. Bills for the codification of laws governing first and second-class townships, given to a commission, may be presented by Senator Weingarten, of New Castle, chairman of the commisssion.

Further evidence of Pinchot's political strategy may be found in his substituting only the "keymen" that he needs in the various departments, and his submission in one lot of the entire group of secretaries for Senate confirmation last Tuesday.

DAISY BACK OF BARS

CONVICTED DAISY—Miss Daisy De Voe, blonde and 26, in coarse prison garb and back of bars after the court refused to allow bail when she was found guilty on one of 35 counts preferred against her for thefts from Clara "It" Bow.

DAISY TO FIGHT CONVICTION FOR ROBBING CLARA

Former Secretary, Worn by First Night in Jail, Will Appeal, Not Ask Parole.

LOS ANGELES, Cal., Jan. 24.—(Universal)—Daisy De Voe, visibly worn after her first night in the county jail, resumed her fight for liberty today.

She announced that she would not seek probation, as had been reported, but that she would appeal from her conviction on a charge of appropriating $825 from Clara Bow, her former employer.

Miss Bow.

As her first move in the new legal struggle she summoned William A. Bairne, criminal attorney, whom she will ask to become associated in her defense. They were scheduled to confer late today.

Miss De Voe, convicted late yesterday on one of 35 grand theft counts lodged against her, spent a restless night in jail, it was revealed. She was placed in a tank with a number of other prisoners, one of whom was suffering from the after effects of intoxication. That prisoner kept Miss De Voe awake during the greater part of the night, and she obtained but little rest.

Aside from that, however, the blonde ex-secretary and companion to the impetuous screen actress had no complaint to make as to her treatment in the jail. In fact, Mrs. Vada Sullivan, head matron, declared Miss De Voe the best prisoner she has "entertained" since the incarceration of Dorothy Mackaye.

BECOMES HYSTERICAL

Miss De Voe said that she underwent one unnerving experience shortly after she was taken to jail. She was placed in one of the bathrooms and instructed to change her clothes. She did so, she said, and when she sought to come out, she thought the door had been locked. She said:

"The room was terribly hot, and I was upset anyway. I got hysterical, I guess, and began to pound on the door and to cry. Then I pulled the door again and discovered it hadn't been locked at all, but had simply stuck."

A number of telegrams expressing sympathy reached Miss De Voe today from various friends and well wishers. One came from four girls in a beauty shop which Miss De Voe had frequented.

DENIES GUILT

Miss De Voe said today:

"I am not going to let this thing stand. I am not guilty and particularly I am not guilty of the charge on which I was convicted. The check in question was signed by Miss Bow herself. I am going to fight this case to the finish.

"I have no harsh feelings of any kind toward Clara. It's not her fault that I'm here. It doesn't make any difference about her, anyway. I simply feel that I have been done a grave injustice."

Miss De Voe is scheduled to appear for sentence before Judge William C. Doran at 10 o'clock Monday morning. At that time she will ask for a new trial.

cates that we must suffer in 1931 for things that haven't happened yet in 1932.

But that's politics. When the the recall is in danger it's no time to think of referendums.

The only way to nail a senator down is to gaze into a crystal globe and try to guess what year he's thinking of.

Then state the nature of your business, previous condition of servitude and leave self-addressed envelope for your spring order of free grass seed.

There's only one way for the voter to get hunky-dory with the politician who thinks a year ahead. That's for the voter to think four years back.

Bank in Alaska Robbed of $4,000

REGINA, Sask., Jan. 24.—(AP.)—Two unmasked bandits held up the Weyburn Security Bank at Coderre, and got away with about $4,000 today.

BRITISH READY TO FREE GANDHI

NEW DELHI, India, Jan. 24.—(AP.)—It was expected tonight that Mahatma Gandhi, Indian Nationalist leader, would be released from jail either tomorrow or soon after.

Gandhi

It was understood that the viceroy, Lord Irwin, planned to release Gandhi and about 30 other important Nationalist chiefs now in prison in connection with the civil disobedience campaign.

A special meeting of the viceroy's executive council this evening was said to have decided that the releases should be arranged by local government authorities.

Great crowds of Indian Nationalists were gathered at Poona today in anticipation of the release of Gandhi.

Assembly near the prison has been forbidden and there was a belief that if Gandhi is liberated the authorities would try to spirit him away by night as a precaution against manifestations by his followers.

'Weaving' Drivers Subject of Safety Display at Tubes

The Better Traffic Committee's traffic safety display which will be placed at the south end of the Liberty Tubes today will be an indictment against drivers who weave through the tunnels, it has been announced.

Walter Rosenbaum, chairman of the education section of the committee, stated the display would be as spectacular as the one placed on the "island" in Bigelow boulevard, below Thirty-fifth street, last summer.

The display, of a semi-portable nature, is the first of a series of such projects planned for 1931. The displays are to be moved to various points in the city and changed frequently, Rosenbaum said.

Cabot Holt Served With Divorce Papers

NEW YORK, Jan. 24.—(AP.)—Mrs. Elizabeth Cabot Holt obtained a court order today permitting her to serve papers in a divorce suit on Henry Holt, Jr. Both are socially prominent. Her attorney said Holt was in a hospital, undergoing voluntary treatment as an inebriate. The divorce suit has been instituted at Dublin, N. H.

WHISKY CUTTING PLANT RAIDED

An alleged whisky cutting plant at 1207 Hodgkiss street was raided yesterday by prohibition agents and constables. About 360 gallons of whisky was reported seized. The raiders also said they seized 20 quarts of gin and other contraband, including an electric heating rod to age green liquor. Elizabeth Schmitt, 40, who was arrested in connection with the raid, was released under bond for a hearing.

A 100-gallon still, 90 gallons of whisky and other contraband were seized in the rear of 932 Island avenue, McKees Rocks, agents said. A raid at 1703 Penn avenue resulted in the seizure of 100 gallons of moonshine and 13 cases of home brew, according to the agents. Other raids, in which seizures were reported, were at 1207 Penn avenue and 247 East Fourth avenue, Homestead.

INQUIRY BEGUN IN HILL BOMBING

Police today were seeking the perpetrators of a mysterious bombing of early yesterday which shattered windows in more than a score of dwellings in the 900 block, Bedford avenue, causing damage estimated at $2,000, and terrorizing the neighborhood.

The bomb is believed to have been thrown from an automobile in front of the two-story brick dwelling of James R. (Coxey) Lancia, 33, of 922 Bedford avenue, Republican chairman of the First District, Second Ward, and a follower of Pat O'Malley, political leader of the "Strip."

Lancia, his wife and four children, asleep on the second floor, were unharmed by the blast, which damaged their home $300. The family left after the bombing, and a constable, relative of Lancia, was placed on guard.

Lancia told police he had not been threatened, and said he believed his place had been mistaken for that of another.

The blast was heard throughout the Hill, Oakland and in the downtown district.

Policeman Slain Over Stolen Auto

MEDFORD, Ore., Jan. 24.—(AP.)—Sam Prescott, Ashland traffic officer, was shot and killed today when he stopped an automobile stolen in Salt Lake City last October. J. C. Adams, 33, was captured by a posse and police said he confessed killing Prescott to avoid arrest for theft of the car.

CLEAR SUSPECT IN BANK KILLING

North Side police last night were holding R. L. McGowan, 37, of 510 East Diamond street, while detectives check his activities on suspicion that he may have been implicated in robberies in that district.

Mr. McGowan

McGowan was arrested Friday night as a suspect in the holdup of the Allegheny Valley Trust Company, Verona, December 6, when Cashier Charles N. McFarland was shot dead by a robber who escaped with $1,000. Employes of the bank yesterday could not identify him, and he was returned to the police station.

East End Burglar Gets $1,272 Loot

Clothing, jewelry and silverware valued at $1,272 was reported last night as stolen from the home of H. F. Gleason, 1450 North Euclid avenue. Entrance was gained through a cellar window.

A personal message from Mr. Rudolph Wurlitzer
PRESIDENT
THE RUDOLPH WURLITZER CO.

The creation of this fine piano at so low a price, I consider to be the greatest contribution to the realization of good music in the home, made during our 200 years of musical history.

Rudolph Wurlitzer

THE LEADER of an age-old industry builds to A NEW IDEA!

Today we live in a magic age. The advancements of modern research and science have wrought wonders in our mode of living, in the luxuries and conveniences we enjoy.

Now, in the creation of today's newest piano, modern research has swept aside the limiting traditions of the past.

The new Farny Grand Piano is the piano of the future — achieved today.

Seven years ago the ideas for this new piano first took shape. It was to be new in conception, new in the values made possible through the latest advancements in research and acoustical science —plus resources of skill, experience and facilities at the command of the technical staff of this world-wide organization.

Here, indeed, was a challenge!

Years were spent in research, developing innovations in design, and acoustical engineering. The experts in the Piano Division did not stop with their own resources. Perfection was the goal. They asked for constructive criticism from the builders of the famous Wurlitzer Cathedral Organs; from the creator of the tone of the world-renowned Wurlitzer Concert Harp; and among others, from Wm. M. Bauer, builder of one of today's most costly pianos.

And now after seven years, the new Farny Grand Piano is ready!

You are invited to the first public showing in this city tomorrow. Come in the most critical mood. You will see a piano that in beauty of line and proportions will grace any home. Its tone will speak for itself. You will find a piano you will want to own.

SHEET AND TUBE APPEALS FROM BAN ON MERGER

Eaton Faces Foes at Board Meeting First Time Since Litigation Over Bethlehem

YOUNGSTOWN, O., Jan. 24 — (AP) — The enjoined billion-dollar merger of Youngstown Sheet and Tube and Bethlehem Steel was given a new lease on life today when the directors of Sheet and Tube decided to appeal the injunction.

Announcement of the decision to appeal the case, made simultaneously by officials here and by Eugene G. Grace, president of Bethlehem Steel Corporation, in New York, came two days before the legal period for the filing of an appeal had expired.

Sitting in the meeting here were Cyrus S. Eaton, Cleveland financier, who won at least a temporary victory in his fight to restrain the merger when the injunction was granted December 29, and the veteran James A. Campbell, chairman of Sheet and Tube, who opposed him. It was the first directors meeting in which these powerful protagonists had met face-to-face since the bitter fight over the consolidation was begun.

Eight of the directors in the session were identified with the pro-merger faction, and four of the others, including Eaton, were the opposition.

Counsel for the latter said the Appeals Court would be asked for an immediate hearing.

Company counsel said they had not decided whether to appeal on the merits of the case, or to carry it up on error.

Today's decision ended reports that the merger project might be dropped, that a new merger plan might be undertaken by agreement with the Eaton forces, or that a bigger merger might be undertaken, including other companies.

WALES, GEORGE TO RIDE BUGGY

HAMILTON, Bermuda, Jan. 24 — (AP) — The Prince of Wales and his brother, Prince George, will be taken for a buggy ride as one of the principal items of their entertainment when they arrive here January 27.

Despite the privileges of royalty, they will not violate the tradition that keeps the Bermudas, or "Summer Isles" as the old travelers knew them, free from the encroachment of the automobile.

The two royal travelers, en route on their "salesmen's" visit to South America, will break their journey here for eight hours when their liner, the Oropesa, puts in at Hamilton.

From Hamilton, the Oropesa will head for Havana, but the princes will not disembark there. At Kingston, Jamaica, where they will arrive February 2, they will for the first time drop their nominal incognito and attend an official function.

The Oropesa will go through the Panama Canal February 5 and arrives at Talara, Peru, the first South American halt, February 5.

Shoots Playmate Playing With Gun

When a revolver was accidentally discharged in the hands of a playmate, Richard Chisholm, 9, of 5115 Carnegie avenue, was shot in the neck last night. He was removed to St. Margaret's Hospital in a serious condition.

The shooting occurred in the bedroom of the Chisholm apartment. The gun was being handled by Paul Majors, 10, of the same address, according to homicide detectives.

A sister, Katherine, 5, and a brother, Ralphel, 7 were playing with their brother and Ray Rawlins, 10, same address, and Billie Shenker, 9, of 5108 Butler street.

Yacht Mayflower Swept by Flames

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 24. (AP)—Fire which broke out aboard the former presidential yacht Mayflower late tonight threatened to destroy the famous craft. Unable to cope with the flames successfully, Navy Yard officials sent in hurry calls to city fire fighting apparatus.

The city also sent a fire boat down the Delaware River to fight the flames from the water side of the ship. The Mayflower, decommissioned more than a year ago has since been tied up at the Philadelphia Navy Yard.

2 Men Hurt as Car Hits Safety Post

Two men were badly hurt when their automobile struck a safety post at West Liberty avenue and Brookline boulevard last night. They were taken to South Side Hospital, where they gave their names as Tom Smith, 617 Greenfield street, and Thomas Holleran, Lemoyne street.

Smith, driver of the car, is suffering from severe injuries of the head and a fractured jaw. Holleran suffered body bruises and lacerations about the face. They are both expected to recover.

HOOVER URGED TO SUBMIT DRY VOTE TO STATES

ator Wheeler (Dem.), of Montana, purported to reveal the President himself as the source of articles published earlier in the week stating that Mr. Hoover was "open minded" on the prohibition question.

Senator Brookhart (Rep.), Iowa, said he interpreted the stories purporting to show the President has an open mind on prohibition to mean that he is for revision to make the dry law more enforceable.

RECORD VOTE ASKED

Senator Bingham (Rep.), Connecticut, offered the bill to legalize four per cent beer. He asked for a record vote and appeared to be in position to get the first test of this kind in the Senate since national prohibition became effective. Bingham said he did not believe President Hoover favored his proposal.

Bingham's bill was offered as a substitute for the pending Howell bill establishing a drastic enforcement act for the District of Columbia. The Howell bill, under attack from the outset by both drys and wets, opened the flood gates of prohibition oratory. It was still pending tonight as adjournment was taken for the weekend, and offered an opening for much future discussion on prohibition.

The Bingham beer measure was sidetracked for disposition of an amendment by Senator Blaine (Rep.), Wisconsin, to strike from the Howell bill provisions allowing search and seizures in homes upon evidence that stills are operating in them or that liquor is delivered to them or removed from them.

BUTTERMILK CITED

Bingham ridiculed the Howell bill in particular and prohibition in general, and pointed out that even buttermilk will generate more than one-half of 1 per cent of alcohol, the legal limit under the Volstead act. His amendment, too, was to legalize porter and remove the half per cent limit on fruit juices and cider.

The Howell bill was flayed by Senator Blaine as a move to set up a "super spy government" in the nation's capital.

"In wartime spies are shot at sunrise. Well might the present spies profit by that example."

He said "public sentiment has turned against the prohibtion law because of the enforcement of that law through spies."

This system, he said, was "obnoxious to a free people" and, if persisted in, would destroy the government."

BORAH EXPLAINS STAND

Senators Borah and Wheeler said they were opposed to legalizing the search of a home into which liquor had been carried for the purpose of sale. Both said they would not object to search warrants for homes used for the sale of liquor in which stills were operated.

Borah explained:

"In order to enforce one provision of the Constitution we ought not to disregard other provisions. That is the reason I voted against the Volstead act."

Blaine said the purpose of the Eighteenth Amendment was to prohibit commercialized liquor traffic and the Volstead Act did not propose to go beyond that in connection with the search of the home.

U. S. POWER INSUFFICIENT

Howell replied to critics of his bill:

"It is recognized that the national prohibition act is not sufficient to enforce prohibition.

"It is designed to supplement local enforcement laws."

The President's former attitude toward malt beverages was discussed by Senator Copeland (Dem.), of New York, who said the President, while food administrator during the World War, had protested against any limitation on the manufacture of beer. Senator Copeland said:

"Mr. Hoover not only declared beer was not intoxicating, but he protested against it being prohibited."

Son Admits Slaying Father Accidentally

SOMERSET, Jan. 24.—(AP.)—State police today attributed a confession to Charles Shaulin, 27, that he accidentally shot to death his father, Frank, 56, on the Shaulin farm Thursday night.

Troopers said they found the gun used in the slaying after being directed to the spot by the son, who previously reported an intruder opened fire on them in the barn.

The son, state police said, told them he fired in the dark and one of the shots struck his father.

life will teach a child in 30 minutes more than a dozen books could teach in 30 weeks.

NOW ALMOST miraculously, pictures and sound are combined. You see the snake and hear its hissing, see the lion and hear its roaring. An audience of Balkan peasants saw, as their first movie, a picture in which a gigantic locomotive speeding directly toward the audience, seemed about to rush over them. A stampede followed, many were injured, the theater was wrecked. No printed book could produce that effect on the human mind. Every public school should include a moving picture machine as part of its teaching force.

Lioness Kills Baby, Trainer Faces Charges

SAN ANTONIO, Tex., Jan. 24.—(INS.)—C. Coley, an animal trainer, faced a charge of negligent homicide today after his "tame" Mexican mountain lioness had bitten and clawed the life from 2-year-old Viola Friesen.

Viola was attacked when she went with other children into the back yard of the Friesen home, where the lioness was chained to a stake in the yard.

The other children, a boy of 15 and a girl of 13, attacked the animal with sticks of stove wood, but were unable to rescue the baby. Coley, attracted by their screams, came to their assistance, killed the lioness with a blow from an axe and rushed the baby to a hospital. She lived only a few minutes.

FARO VICTIM QUITS U. S. POST

quiver. Tears began falling from her red-rimmed eyes. She said:

"I've got a statement here."

She began passing out copies to eager hands.

She was asked:

"Did you sign a note for that loan of $50,000?"

"No. . . No."

"Are you going to pay Litsinger back?"

She moaned:

"Please, please! I'm so nervous. Don't ask questions."

Mrs. Blacklidge's statement began with a reiteration that she was the victim of a clever band of card sharks, and that "it is a brutal injustice to claim that I had anything to do with the criminals except to be their victim." Her part in the whole affair, she said, was a matter of her own judgment.

ASSAILS 'FRIEND'

She did not refer to Litsinger by name. She merely said:

"The unfounded accusations from one whom I had regarded as a friend added to the crushing humiliation and a blow which I received when I realized that I was dealing not with sympathetic friends (the card sharks), but with criminals. I have told the truth regarding the purpose for which the $50,000 was to be used and I have told the truth regarding the arrangements that the former friend who now attacks me was to receive $10,000 for the use of the $50,000."

She referred to her statement to Springfield police Wednesday in which she said she borrowed the money from Litsinger, a fellow worker in the Republican faction of Senator Charles S. Deneen, to re-enter a faro game and collect $207,000 paper profits which she had won earlier.

Robert E. Neely, assistant collector, became acting collector tonight, the Internal Revenue Bureau announced in accepting Mrs. Blacklidge's resignation.

Spain Ready to Ease Rule of 'Mailed Fist'

HOUSE OF DAVID GUARD PLACED ON 'TREASURE'

Bewhiskered Squad Ready to Foil Seekers After Dead King Benjamin's Hoard

BENTON HARBOR, Mich., Jan. 24 (AP).—A squad of [illegible] bewhiskered men stood guard over the famous Diamond House of the House of David religious colony here tonight, ready to foil any attempts by outsiders to enter and search for the hidden wealth of their former leader, the late "King" Benjamin Purnell.

Members of the colony viewed the posting of the guard as a verification of the legend of their former leader's hoarded riches, a legend that has run like a golden thread through the thousands of pages of depositions, bills and petitions which comprise nearly a decade of legal battles.

WOMAN STARTS HUNT

The revival of interest in Benjamin's supposed treasure, once estimated at between $600,000 and $700,000 and consisting of $1,000 bills and precious stones, came when Mrs. Ada Ross Schneider, the colony's auditor and secretary for 25 years, announced her intention of suing for wages. She added parenthetically that she and several other women in the colony knew the money's whereabouts.

Immediately H. T. Dewhirst, Benjamin's successor as head of the colony, sued for a writ of discovery to make Mrs. Schneider tell what she knew and enable him to locate the vaults which during nearly 15 years of his undisputed control of the colony have remained hidden.

Attorneys argued Mrs. Schneider accepted about $35,000 for her services and withdrew her claim. Dewhirst then withdrew his suit.

WIDOW IN RACE

Not so easily satisfied was "Queen" Mary Purnell, Benjamin's widow and ruler over a colony of 200 dissenters who followed her into exile when she was ousted from the House of David two years ago.

Mary appealed to Gov. Wilber M. Brucker for help in locating the treasure, failed to get action soon enough to satisfy her and turned to the Department of Internal Revenue.

Twice before Mary had voiced her conviction that the money exists. Now she says she is determined to bring it to light and claim a share for herself and her followers.

The "Diamond House," besides being the reputed location of the hidden vaults, is the resting place of the mummified remains of the former cult leader whose resurrection is considered a certainty by "the faithful."

New Kensington Plant Wins Trophy

The United States Aluminum Company safety improvement trophy has been presented to the New Kensington plant of the Aluminum Company of America. The presentation was made by R. A. Hunt, president of the company, before the assemblage of approximately 4,000 employes. The affair marks 1930 as the outstanding year in the history of the local plant, so far as safety progress is concerned. R. M. Perry is the superintendent.

Idleness Census Takers Hampered

Suspicions that enumerators for the government unemployment census are collectors have added to the difficulties experienced in making the count, James E. Routley, local supervisor, said yesterday.

Other matters that have made the survey difficult have been vicious dogs at homes where the enumerators have visited and the frigid weather experienced several days this week, he said.

EDISON MEDAL TO DR. CONRAD

Dr. Conrad

The Edison gold medal, presented to the year's outstanding contributor to electrical engineering, will be given to Dr. Frank Conrad, Pittsburgh engineer with the Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing Company, at Wednesday's session of the American Institute of Electrical Engineers in New York.

Dr. Conrad's contribution has been in improving radio broadcasting and short-wave radio transmission.

The sessions will commence tomorrow with a symposium on telegraphy and a joint session of the committee on transportation and the transportation group of the New York session, ending Friday evening with an informal dinner sponsored by the Cornell University Society of Engineers.

Very Cautious Burglar Foiled By Light Sleeper

A light sleeper spoiled the unusual precautions of a burglar yesterday before he could obtain any loot.

When she saw a man entering her third-floor room on his hands and knees, Elizabeth Gazo, 24, a maid in the home of Mrs. William H. Jacob, of 4818 Baum boulevard, screamed. Oakland police couldn't find a clue when they were hastily summoned. But Mrs. Jacob found a dining room window unlatched and the light bulbs loosened so they would not light in case of discovery.

The astute burglar had unlocked the door from the inside to pave the way for a rapid retreat.

PLAN CARNATION EXHIBIT HERE

Finest specimens of the carnation are expected to be exhibited at the fortieth annual convention of the American Carnation Society to be held in the William Penn Hotel Wednesday and Thursday.

Growers from throughout the country will compete in the exhibition, which will be held in conjunction with the business sessions both days. The annual banquet will be held the second night, with the Pittsburgh Florists and Gardeners' Club as host.

Hundreds of tickets have been issued for the exhibit, which will be free to the public. The exhibit will be open from 6 p. m. until 11:30 o'clock the first night, and from 9 a. m. until 11:30 p. m. on Thursday.

T. Malbranc, of Johnstown, vice president of the national society and president of the Pittsburgh club, is general chairman. Oren F. Whitney, of Biddeford, Me., is national president. Assisting in convention plans are Ed Ludwig, chairman retail display group, and Vice President Harry Ackerman and Secretary William T. Usinger, of the Pittsburgh club.

'THRILL' KILLING CONFESSED BY 2 ERIE YOUTHS

Father of 2 Admits He Shot Filling Station Man, Asks Wife Be Protected

ERIE, Pa., Jan. 24. (INS.) Two Erie youths, both married, and one the father of two children, who told in written confessions they shot down and killed James Massing, a gas station attendant, five months ago, according to police, today were held in the Erie County prison.

Alois Schligler, 22, the youthful father, cried out, detectives reported, at the end of seven hours' grilling:

"I did it."

"I wanted a thrill. I didn't mean to kill him. It was all an accident. The excitement of it got me."

Richard Hinz, 20, his companion, corroborated the confession and admitted his share in the holdup, state police reported.

WIFE NEAR DEATH

Schligler was quoted as pleading:

"Don't tell my wife—she's dying. My little girl has pneumonia. What a mess."

Four days ago Schligler's wife gave birth to a baby girl. The mother's condition is reported as critical.

The pair told police they were riding in an automobile last August 23, the night of the fatal shooting, Hinz with his wife, and Schligler with another woman. After taking their companions home, the two men passed the gas station as they were cruising about the city. Schligler said his companion told him "that place would be easy." Hinz had worked at the station.

TELLS OF SHOT

Schligler said he proceeded, single-handed, to hold up the attendant, Massing.

Seeing his pistol, Schligler told police, the attendant slammed the door in his face. He confessed, according to the police report:

"The door hit my hand and the next thing I knew there was an explosion and Massing fell against some oil drums."

Arraigned before a magistrate, the two pleaded not guilty. They were arrested yesterday after a five months' investigation of the shooting.

MOORE CONTEST UP TOMORROW

Mrs. Dorothy Russell O'Riley Calvit, daughter of the late Lillian Russell Moore, is scheduled to come to Pittsburgh from New York tomorrow and appear before Judge Thomas P. Trimble, in Orphans Court, in her effort to break the will of her stepfather, the late Alexander P. Moore, former ambassador to Spain. Moore left $100,000 to Queen Victoria, of Spain; $25,000 to Mrs. Dorothy Caruso, and only $1,000 to Mrs. Calvit.

Mrs. Calvit claims Moore had made a pre-nuptial agreement with Lillian Russell to provide for her daughter. She wants a half interest.

The Moore estate was called for audit before Judge Trimble last Monday, but the proceedings were interrupted by Attorney Ira C. Houck asking for postponement, saying he had just been retained as local counsel for Mrs. Calvit and needed time to prepare his case. He asked a month's delay, but the judge granted him a week. He is said to have eight witnesses to support Mrs. Calvit's claim. Their identity has not been disclosed, but it is hinted several are ladies of the stage.

The Union Trust Company, trustee of the Moore estate, through Attorneys Weller and Wicks, reported a balance for distribution of $575,046.

Westinghouse Radio Man Legion Speaker

Lloyd C. Thomas, commercial manager of Westinghouse radio stations, will give a talk on "The Romance of Radio" to members of Pittsburgh City Post No. 59, American Legion, in the Nixon restaurant at noon Wednesday.

Mr. Thomas

Thomas has supervision over program and commercial work of all Westinghouse radio stations. His earliest experience in radio was gained in Nebraska, at Station KFKX, where he was also a member of the state Legislature, newspaper editor and chamber of commerce secretary.

Arnold to Protest Non-Agency Station

Borough officials and business men of Arnold will file a protest with Pennsylvania Railroad officials on the railroad's announcement that they intend to take away the passenger agent from Arnold station March 17.

A notice of the railroad's intention has been posted at Arnold station. The making of Arnold a non-agency station is favored by railroad officials as an economy measure. Burgess John Hunger, of Arnold, says a protest will be filed with G. C. Sixsmith, superintendent of the Conemaugh division, and if necessary may be taken the Public Service Commission.

PIONEER OF OIL INDUSTRY DIES

A history of the Western Pennsylvania oil industry was halted, half-finished, with the death early yesterday of Alexander Heasley, 77, pioneer oil field worker, at his home, 563 Fourth avenue, Pitcairn.

Starting as a derrick helper in the oil fields near New Bethlehem when a boy, Mr. Heasley followed the oil industry in Western Pennsylvania until his retirement a few years ago. A book, based upon a diary kept over a number of years, was begun recently.

Mr. Heasley was a member of the First Baptist Church, Pitcairn; Ancient Order of Knights of Mystic Chain and Fraternal Patriots of America. He leaves his wife, Mrs. Alpha Heasley; a sister, Mrs. Martha Litheo, of Columbus, O., and a brother, Henry C. Heasley, of Grove City. Funeral services will be held at the family residence tomorrow afternoon. Interment will be in Grandview Cemetery, McKeesport.

Because We Sold More Furniture in 1930

You Save 15% to 30% at Kaufmann's NOW

1930 was a good year in our Furniture Department. Selling MORE furniture than ever before, permitted us to buy heavily when factories with huge unsold surpluses were clamoring for purchasers, and prices went the lowest (quality for quality) in the history of the industry.

$200,000 Worth of This New-Bought Furniture Is Represented NOW—Tomorrow—on Our Eighth and Eleventh Floors

It is furniture built to one unvarying standard of excellence — styled for the smart, keenly-informed buyer, who knows her design, color and line — and DEMANDS it at the lowest price consistent with quality. For such purchasers the opportunity now existing on our Eighth and Eleventh Floors is literally without parallel. We INVITE and URGE inspection and comparison. See for yourself that quality here still means what it meant last year; that furniture, following fashion's footsteps, has created ever more beautiful backgrounds for the revival of feminine graces; that anything and everything you have wanted and dreamed of having in your home is here — and now — at prices 15% to 30% BELOW OUR LAST YEAR'S AVERAGE! See the Budget House and Thrift Apartments, now completely refurnished. Ask about the Convenient Payment Plan, which is helping thousands to bring Kaufmann Quality Furniture into their homes. Above all else—COMPARE!

APPEAL LOST OVER PAROLE

Revocation by the Federal District Court of a parole of four years and eight months granted Charles E. Parks, former retail shoe merchant in Ambridge, was upheld by the United States Circuit Court, to whom the defendant had appealed.

Parks, on February 21, 1929, pleaded guilty to falsifying bankrupt assets. After telling the court his wife was sick, that she and two children were dependent upon him, and agreeing to reimburse creditors in the amount of $1,968, he was placed on probation.

The probation order was subsequently revoked by Judge F. P. Schoonmaker, and Parks sentenced to six months in the Beaver County jail, when it was testified he had taken his wife for an illegal operation the day following his parole, and that he had failed to make the monthly payments to creditors.

3 PROSTRATED BY SEWER GAS

Two men and a boy were almost suffocated by sewer gas in McKeesport late yesterday. They are recovering in the McKeesport Hospital.

Harry Lichtenstein, 23, of 3000 Jenny Lind street, owner of the Licht Paper Company, entered his office at 2:30 yesterday afternoon. Hearing groans from a rear room he investigated and found his stock clerk, Mike Plifka, 20, of 620 White street, and Anthony Meffino, 8, of 525 White street, unconscious. Lichtenstein carried the boy outside but the fumes overcame him as he was bending over Plika's body.

Fifteen minutes later Lichtenstein's brother, Sam, 39, entered the building and found both men on the floor.

HUNDREDS WEEP AT RITES FOR ALMA RUBENS

Ricardo Cortez Estranged Mate Attends Service, Films Celebrities Present

By JOLLY V. RICKMAN,
International News Service.

HOLLYWOOD, Cal., Jan. 24.—In marked contrast to her life of swift ascent to fortune, Alma Rubens, once one of the most beautiful motion picture stars, found peace in death today.

Hollywood friends, some of them of an older generation in filmdom, and a huge crowd of other persons assembled today and heard the simple burial rites of the girl who died last Wednesday night in the midst of a brave struggle to "come back."

Part of the great throng was admitted to a room in the burial chapel of the Little Church of the Flowers. There these people could hear the music and the words of the sermon, but could not see the services.

The service began with the singing of two hymns by a hidden quartet accompanied by a stringed orchestra.

The hymns were "Abide With Me" and "Lead Kindly Light."

HUSBAND ATTENDS

Ricardo Cortez, screen star and Miss Rubens' husband, was reunited with her at her burial service today after he had been estranged from her a year or so ago.

The Christian Science service was read by T. F. Fell.

Referring to Miss Rubens' effort to return to her eminence as a motion picture actress, the reader said:

"We all go on struggling to make progress, but finally we must come to realize that through Christ Jesus, alone, is progress made."

Many in the little chapel were sobbing. Outdoors where thousands stood, many of them bareheaded in the hot sunshine, there were tearful faces.

As the services neared the close and members of Miss Rubens' family approached the coffin to make final farewells, a striking hush fell over the chapel.

The singers in low voices and with the violin muting its plaintive notes, began "Going Home," a song Miss Rubens had loved.

Suddenly a score of full-throated canaries hidden behind drapings of the chapel burst into full-voiced song.

MUFFLED SOBS

Muffled sobs sounded in the chapel.

The family comprised Mrs. Theresa Rubens, mother; Ricardo Cortez and his brother, Stanley Cortez, and Mr. and Mrs. Bruce W. Lodge, of Fresno, sister and brother-in-law of Miss Rubens.

The body was to go tonight at 6 o'clock from Glendale to Fresno, Cal., where Mrs. Rubens makes her home. Burial will be in the family plot.

Three hysterical women were forcibly ejected from the funeral chapel prior to the services. One of the women was led from the chapel by attendants when they detected her trying to tear a fragment from the flowing veil which rested over the casket.

Another woman later created a tremendous stir when, gazing at the composed and lovely features of Miss Rubens, she shrieked:

"She's breathing! I saw her breathe!"

The most daring raid, however, was made, according to attendants, by a woman in black who was seen fumbling with the veil. The attendant said when he reached the woman's side she had reached beneath the veil and was trying to tear a piece from the shroud on the body itself.

LEVINE MISSING WITH HIS WIFE, FACING ARREST

Possession of $2,200 Stolen Stock Starts Police on Flier's Turbulent Trail

NEW YORK, Jan. 24.—(AP)—For almost three weeks Charles A. Levine, Brooklyn salvage millionaire, who became the storm petrel of the airways, has been missing while police have hunted him with a warrant for arrest.

Today his attorney said he had no idea where Levine or his wife may be, and he had so notified the district attorney because he did not want to be suspected of concealing him.

Bare-headed and wearing an ordinary business suit, with the morning paper he had been reading stuffed in his pocket, Levine climbed nonchanantly into his monoplane Columbia one summer dawn four years ago, and soon was on his way to fame as the first aerial passenger across the Atlantic ocean.

CONSTANT TROUBLE

Since then Charles A. Levine has been almost constantly in some sort of trouble.

He dropped from sight here in New York January 6, and that day, just a few weeks after he had been absolved of a counterfeiting charge in Vienna, the district attorney obtained a warrant for his arrest because he had failed to appear and explain how $2,200 worth of American Telephone and Telegraph stock, said to have been stolen, came into his possession.

SUIT AFTER SUIT

He and Clarence Chamberlin crawled out of the Columbia at Eisleben, Germany, on June 6, 1927, and even as he was receiving the welcome of Berlin the U. S. Postoffice Department was investigating because he carried across 250 pieces of mail without proper authorization.

He came home to a New York welcome—and was greeted by a $500,000 lawsuit brought by the government. He settled it, then was sued by a former employe for $148,107 and by the Nixon Nitration Company in New Jersey for $500,000.

Just before Christmas, accompanied by Mabel Boll, he returned from Europe and was met at the pier by his wife who had sent $7,000 to Vienna to get him out of jail. Now Levine and his wife have dropped from sight. Miss Boll, her friends say, has gone back to Europe.

Weather Outlook For This Week

Weather outlook for the week beginning tomorrow:

Ohio Valley and Tennessee: Cloudy with some probability of rain Monday and a period of general rains middle of week, followed by generally fair latter part, except snow flurries in upper Ohio Valley. Temperature above normal first half of week, although weather will be somewhat colder Monday and Monday night. Considerably colder latter half of week.

North and Middle Atlantic States: Rain in middle Atlantic states Monday and again Wednesday or Thursday, followed by generally fair; warmer in north Atlantic and mild temperature in middle Atlantic states Monday, colder Tuesday and Wednesday, warmer Thursday and considerably colder Friday or Saturday.

Region of the Great Lakes: Some snow beginning of week and again during latter half, moderately cold first part, somewhat warmer near middle, and cold again at end of week.

STATE CLOSES CRESSON BANK

HARRISBURG, Jan. 24.—The State Banking Department today took possession of the Cresson Deposit Bank, a state institution at Cresson. George F. Taylor has been placed in charge as special deputy by Secretary Peter G. Cameron.

Secretary Cameron said:

"The action was necessary due to lack of business activity in the region and the unusual heavy withdrawals in the last year."

The bank has a capital stock of $50,000 and a surplus of $15,000. Its average annual business was approximately $300,000.

LAVAL TO FORM FRENCH CABINET

By GEORGE W. HINMAN, JR.,
Universal Service.

PARIS, Jan. 24.—Senator Pierre Laval tonight stepped in where Aristide Briand did not care to tread, accepting President Gaston Doumergue's mandate to form a cabinet and lead France out of its second political muddle in six weeks.

Shortly after the refusal of Briand, veteran pilot of France's foreign policies, to accept the responsibility of solving the present political tangle was announced, Laval called at the Elysee Palace. On leaving he declared he would take up the round of political calls tonight in an effort to form a cabinet by tomorrow.

GOING TO CENTER

That Laval is going to the Center for his support in forming a government to succeed the short-lived cabinet of Theodore Steeg was evidenced by his announcement that he will first confer with Deputy Leo Bouisson and Senator Paul Doumer.

It is also felt that he will seek support from the Center Left, although he is not expected to go as far as did M. Steeg. That Briand, a member of the Left, will retain the foreign ministry goes almost without saying. Since 1925 he has held that portfolio in all but one cabinet.

Four Men Arrested In Fight Over Rum

Four men were arrested last night following a fight and attempted shooting in a grocery store at 1215 Wylie avenue, according to detectives.

Detectives say James Danas, 39, of 1723 Etna street, attempted to shoot George Clark, 38, 1215 Wylie avenue, in an argument over the transportation of liquor.

The shooting was averted, according to Detective Lieut. Edward Haarkins, when Edward Swearingen, 27, of Homewood avenue and James Walton, a Negro, of 70 Crawford street, interfered.

Capital Flu Epidemic Sweeping Congress; Few Cases Serious

WASHINGTON, Jan. 24.—(AP)—Influenza has spread to Congress. Dr. George W. Calver, Capitol physician, rushed to answer 18 calls before noon today. He said a dozen were for mild influenza cases.

These attacks and other ills have cut wide swathes in the ranks of representatives and senators, lengthening the sick list, particularly during the past week. Most maladies are not serious, but some have kept legislators away from their tasks for days.

Representative Pearl Peden Oldfield, of Arkansas, has a severe attack of influenza. Yesterday's leaves-of-absence for illness included Representative Moore, of Ohio, and others.

Auto Breaks Window During Wild Dash

William J. Saurers, 22, of 2320 Sidney street, was driving east on Carson street yesterday, police say, when he attempted to pass a street car on the left. A truck forced him to the sidewalk, where his automobile smashed a chewing gum vending machine outside the hat-cleaning establishment of George Zafarion, 1019 Carson street. The vending machine was thrown through an adjoining plate glass window of Fred Rofink's barber shop.

And that is why Saurers, who didn't even stop, police say, will get a hearing tomorrow on a reckless driving charge.

SUPPLY DEALER PARLEY SLATED

The Western Pennsylvania Builders' Supply Dealers' Association will hold its annual convention and business meeting in the Fort Pitt Hotel Tuesday.

Attention will be paid to bettering the marketing of building materials of all kinds. More co-operation between manufacturers and dealers will be urged.

W. S. Campbell, of New Wilmington, president of the National Builders' Supply Association, will deliver the principal address at the banquet in the evening.

TAILORS OPEN NATIONAL MEET

While the country receives the fashion decree for the well-dressed man this year, members of the National Association of Merchant Tailors of America will review and discuss a four-year advertising campaign at the annual convention opening tomorrow for four days in the William Penn Hotel.

One million dollars will be invested in the newspaper and magazine campaign proposed to stimulate interest in clothes individually tailored. Carleton P. Schaub, of Minneapolis, president of the association, announced the campaign will be entirely educational in character.

The convention sessions will be devoid of social affairs according to C. C. Beach of Pittsburgh, general chairman of the convention arrangements. Assisting Chairman Beach are R. A. Phelleps, Joseph Nepper, Barney Muddendorf, Felix Notti, Fred Loechner, Ralph DeNinno, B. F. Lombardi, P. M. Molin, E. G. Hlewatt, Victor Graff, Richard Deren, Martin Brown, Leo Petrilli, Henry Russo, M. Hirsch, Paul Betzman and Carl Hoof.

ANTI-BLUE LAW DRIVE STARTED

An intensive campaign has been started by the Anti-Blue Law Association of Pennsylvania to bring about the passage of the local option bill covering Sunday observance, Thomas J. Culhane, secretary of the association, announced here yesterday.

The bill was introduced by Representative Michael J. Musmanno, of Pittsburgh, in the Legislature last Thursday.

Culhane said:

"Within the next two weeks prominent Pennsylvanians will speak over the radio urging the people of the state, the vast majority of whom are opposed to the 'blue laws,' to immediately communicate with their representatives at Harrisburg, requesting their support of the bill. Were it not for these laws, the unemployment situation could be greatly relieved today."

Bellevue Students To Present Concert

Students of the Bellevue High School will give a concert in the school's auditorium, Thursday evening, February 5. It will include a girls' chorus, mixed chorus and orchestra. The chorus will be under the direction of Miss Roberta Donaldson and the orchestra under direction of C. G. Brackmann.

New P.R.R. Regional Head to Be Honored

Civic and industrial leaders of Pittsburgh will welcome John F. Deasy, newly-appointed vice president of the Pennsylvania Railroad Central region, at a luncheon meeting sponsored by the Pittsburgh Chamber of Commerce Friday.

James Rea, president of the chamber, will be chairman of the meeting. L. I. MacQueen is chairman of the committee on luncheon arrangements. Many of the 45 officers and directors, representing the major commercial activities of the chamber, will be present. Deasy succeeded E. W. Smith, who resigned January 1.

Play to Be Given At Safety Meeting

A safety play, "The Quitter," by M. D. Conroy, will be presented by the Carnegie Tech School of Drama at the second meeting tomorrow night in the Moose auditorium of the Western Pennsylvania Safety Council's 12th year course. The Mesta Machine Company male chorus will provide musical entertainment.

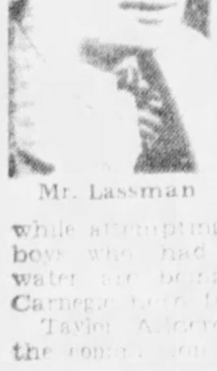
J. G. Campbell, general chairman of the twelfth annual course, will preside at the meeting which begins at 7:45. The course, which consists of seven meetings on consecutive Monday evenings, was opened last week with an address by the Rev. Dr. E. J. Van Etten. More than 1,200 attended the first session.

St. George Cadets To Hold Reunion

The annual reunion and card party of the Knights of St. George Cadets will be held Wednesday night in the Mt. Oliver G. B. U. Hall, Arlington avenue and Brownsville road. Maj. Gen. John Lohrum has been named general chairman.

Lassman, Drowned Athlete, Urged for Carnegie Medal

Al Lassman, whose brilliant athletic career came to an end here when he was seriously injured two years ago in a football game against Carnegie Tech and who was drowned in Maine may get a posthumous Carnegie hero medal.



Mr. Lassman

Confidential reports describing how the New York University football captain and star tackle drowned in Long Lake last July while attempting to rescue three boys who had fallen into the water are being studied by the Carnegie hero fund commission.

Taylor Acheson, manager of the commission, said yesterday:

"An investigator will be sent to Harrison, Me., to interview the rescued boys shortly. Cursory investigation of reports received so far have disclosed some conflicting statements, but we hope to get all the facts first hand through our investigator and a full report will be laid before the commission as quickly as possible."

Lassman was injured here in a game that virtually decided the eastern championship.

66TH EPISCOPAL CHURCH MEET BEGINS TUESDAY

Bishop Alexander Mann Will Open Pittsburgh Diocese Meet; Visitors to Talk.

Three bishops of the Protestant Episcopal Church will have leading parts in the sessions of the sixty-sixth annual convention of the Diocese of Pittsburgh at Trinity Cathedral Tuesday and Wednesday.

Following the administration of the Holy Communion Tuesday morning, the Rt. Rev. Dr. Alexander Mann, bishop of the Pittsburgh Diocese, will make the annual address.

The Rt. Rev. Dr. Albert Sidney Thomas, bishop of South Carolina, will speak Tuesday afternoon on the work of St. Paul's Mission at the State College in Orangeburg, S. C., among the Negroes. The Diocese of Pittsburgh is planning to raise $10,000 to build a chapel for the mission.

CREIGHTON TO SPEAK

The Rt. Rev. Dr. Frank W. Creighton, missionary bishop of Mexico and executive secretary for the domestic and Latin American missions of the denomination, will speak Tuesday night on religious conditions in the Mexican field.

Bishop Creighton was born in Frankford, a suburb of Philadelphia. After a number of years as a lay reader he was ordained a priest in 1915. He was consecrated missionary bishop of Mexico in 1926, coming to that position at a time when a delicate religious situation existed in that country following the adoption of a new constitution.

RECEPTION FOR OLIVER

A reception for David B. Oliver, oldest layman of the Diocese of Pittsburgh, will be attended by the entire convention Tuesday afternoon. A reception by the Bishop of the Diocese and Mrs. Mann will be held in the evening.

Spencer Miller, Jr., consultant to the department of social service of the national council, will speak Wednesday morning on "The Church in An Industrial Civilization." Addresses will also be heard from the diocesan missionaries, the Rev. L. L. Perkins, of St. Paul's, Kittanning; the Rev. William S. Thomas, Jr., of All Saints', Aliquippa, and the Rev. E. L. Pielow, of St. Paul's, Mt. Lebanon.

RETAIL LUMBER MEN TO MEET

The twenty-fourth annual convention and reunion of the Retail Lumber Dealers' Association will be held February 4, 5, and 6, at the William Penn Hotel. More than 500 delegates are expected to attend the convention.

Will A. Davis has been named director of ceremonies for the convention. Speakers will include President James Rae, of the Pittsburgh Chamber of Commerce; F. A. Moesta, of Kittanning, president of the Retail Lumber Dealers' Association; W. C. Moore, of Philadelphia; R. D. Forbes, of Philadelphia; Eric Fisher Wood, architect; Dr. Louis K. Manley, of the University of Pittsburgh; A. S. McAllister of the United States Bureau of Standards; and Edwin B. George, of the United States Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce.

On Febuary 5, at 6 p. m., the Dealers will hold a banquet at the hotel, at which the principal speakers will be Dr. Stanley L. Krebs, of New York, and Herbert Leon Cope, of Caro, Mich. A dance will follow the banquet. A ladies' luncheon will be held at noon that day in the Pittsburgh Athletic Club.

English Weavers Firm in Lockout

MANCHESTER, Eng., Jan. 24.—(AP.)—Weavers in the Lancashire cotton industry voted heavily against authorizing their leaders to resume negotiations with millowners looking toward installation of the so-called more looms per weaver system.

A ballot among union members stood 90,770 against 44,990, it was announced this afternoon.

Millowners locked out 250,000 weavers on this issue and the adverse vote probably means that an equal number of spinners will be thrown into idleness, and the textile industry will be tied up until the difficulty is solved.

Reserve Officers To Fete Guardsmen

The first annual reception and dance will be given by the reserve officers of the Pittsburgh area in honor of the National Guard in the auditorium of the 176th Field Artillery Armory, Bayard and Thackeray streets, February 7. Lieut. Col. William A. Crede is the chairman of the executive committee.

Askst BIG UGLY What Is ACNE? PIMPLES

Yes! That's the simple answer, but Acne is more than just a big pimple—better to call it a big stubborn pimple.

That's why you must fight this obstinate skin disease with something powerful enough to kill it and swiftly get the unsightly thing off the skin.

So we advise all who are so unfortunate as to have Acne to get rid of it at once and for all by using Emerald Oil, a powerful, healing, antiseptic oil that no case of Acne, Pimples or Eczema can withstand.

And those itchy toes that get raw and sore—the germs that cause it are killed by Emerald Oil. Don't fuss time with weak washes—Emerald Oil is guaranteed by druggists everywhere to rid you of stubborn unsightly skin troubles, or money back—an 85 cent bottle lasts 2 weeks.

Challenged to Shoot, Robbers Kill Victim

ALBION, Wis., Jan. 24.—(AP.)—Frank H. Kelling, who challenged two robbers to "shoot if you want to," died in a hospital today. The 59-year-old postmaster and storekeeper was shot after he dared the robbers during an unsuccessful holdup in his store last night. After the shooting, the thugs slugged a customer and fled.

Train Robbers' Victim Improves

BELLEFONTAINE, O., Jan. 24.—(AP.)—Further improvement was noted today in the condition of Edwin K. Nelson Jr. of Tampa, Fla., who was seriously wounded by the bandits who robbed Pullman passengers on a Big Four train between here and Carey, O., Thursday morning.

Physicians said the wounded man had considerable rest last night and that grave fears for his death has been transformed to hope for his recovery.

Mexico Gives Flight Permit to McAdoo

MEXICO CITY, Jan. 24.—(AP.)—The department of communications has granted William G. McAdoo, former United States secretary of the Treasury and director general of railroads, permission to fly with a party of friends over Mexico. It is understood they will proceed from Los Angeles to Mexico City via El Paso late this month or early in February.

Belgium Denies Big Sum for Defenses

BRUSSELS, Jan. 24.—(AP.)—The Belgian Government today issued a formal statement correcting an impression that its plans for strenghtening the frontier defenses call for the expenditure of $55,000,000. The government scheme contemplates expenditure of only $17,000,000, the statement said. The $55,000,000 program was that advanced by the opposition.

Fumes Kill Former Pittsburgher in Erie

ERIE, Jan. 24.—(INS.)—Victim of monoxide gas generated in the closed garage housing his automobile, Frank H. Bond, 55, retired Erie merchant and former Pittsburgh resident, is dead today.

Bond's body was found on the running board of his machine by his wife. The motor was still running.

The merchant came to Erie from Pittsburgh 27 years ago and established a clothing store. He retired three years ago.

Pittsburgh Academy Alumni Plan Dance

Members of the Pittsburgh Academy Alumni Association will give a dinner and dance at the Hotel Schenley, Tuesday, February 17. Garnet R. Speer is president of the organization. The committee includes: Harvey Salt, general chairman; G. R. Speer, program; Lavada Troup Dunbar and Burd Hunter Thirkield, tickets; De Forest W. Ludwig and William Blower, publicity; James C. McCrady, Jr., printing; Walter J. Bragdon, finance.

Cornell Secretary To Address Alumni

Ray S. Ashbery, recently appointed alumni field secretary for Cornell University, Ithaca, N. Y., will be the first speaker in a series of monthly talks at the Cornell Club of Western Pennsylvania luncheons when he appears in the William Penn Hotel Friday to tell Cornell alumni of recent developments in Ithaca. In entertaining one speaker each month, the Cornell Club is setting a new precedent, according to T. C. McDermott, president.

P. R. R. Men Called to Man Rail Posts of A. E. F.

ATTERBURY PERSONALITY, GRASP OF SITUATION WON PERSHING'S ADMIRATION

Allies Sought U. S. Troops as Replacements, Clemenceau Protested Delay in Sending Troops Into Line.

MY EXPERIENCES IN THE WORLD WAR

By GEN. JOHN J. PERSHING

CHAPTER XIV.

In response to my request to Washington for an experienced man to take charge of rail transportation, W. W. Atterbury, general manager of the Pennsylvania Railroad, arrived in France and reported to me September 1, 1917.

Gen. Pershing.

In our first brief conversation we ran over the problem in a general way. Considerable headway in the organization of our railroad system had already been made by the Engineer Corps. Much to my surprise, Mr. Atterbury seemed to be very familiar with the situation, and his personality, his force, his grasp of the difficulties of the task and his willingness to undertake it appealed to me at once.

So, without hesitation, and with a feeling that undoubtedly the right man had been found, I told him that he would be appointed. A few days later in consultation with Col. Harry Taylor, the chief of engineers, and Col. Walgus, we determined the details of readjustment required.

An independent transportation department was created to operate and maintain all broad and narrow gauge railways and canals in American use, and to construct roads, wharves, shops and other buildings for railway purposes, although the construction continued for the time being under the Engineer Corps.

At Atterbury's suggestion a cable was sent requesting certain men to fill important positions in the organization. The list included J. A. McRae, general manager of the Long Island Railroad, for general manager, with C. M. Bunting as business manager, H. C. Booz as engineer for construction, and J. G. Rogers as deputy. The last three were then with the Pennsylvania Railroad. The railway problem was far from easy and many were the obstacles to be overcome, both in our own and in the French services. Successful management would have been very doubtful under a leader without Atterbury's patience, ability and force of character.

My diary notes the following:

"Paris, Monday, September 3, 1917. Called on Gen. Foch, Chief of Staff, yesterday, on routine of procurement, but his office has no control. Afterward talked with Paul Painleve, Minister of War, on the same subject. De Chambrun, de Ferronay and my own staff working for better liaison with French bureaus.

"Conferred with Atterbury this morning. Took Col. Dawes this afternoon to call on Minister of War and explained purpose of our Purchasing Agency. Called on the Minister of Munitions with Gen. Kenley to expedite manufacture of airplanes for our service.

"Frequent conferences with heads of our various activities enable me to give direction and impetus and promote co-ordination."

It was foreseen that with the removal of my headquarters to Chaumont our supply officers would find it difficult to keep in close touch with the corresponding French bureaus in Paris, and as we were to be within the zone of the armies, co-operation with French Army Headquarters would assume greater importance. Since the line of authority separating this zone from the rear was not distinctly defined, it was evident that procurement in general, especially regarding the use of facilities, might become complicated. In my discussion with M. Painleve he thought that with intelligent liaison officers there should be no difficulty, and promised to expedite our business with the bureaus.

Visits to our training areas by the French, official and otherwise, had become rather frequent. One of the visitors, M. Georges Clemenceau, who always remained a power even when not in any official position (Clemenceau was not then prime minister), called at the headquarters of the 1st Division, accompanied by Gen. de Castelnau, the commander of the group of armies with which it was serving.

Gen. de Castelnau

Clemenceau

Urged Troops Be Put Into Line Without Delay

In the course of the conversation with Gen. Sibert, the division commander, M. Clemenceau, with considerable emphasis, urged that our troops be put into the line without delay. It was explained to him by Gen. de Castelnau that as soon as they were sufficiently advanced the troops of the division were to be placed by brigades with the French in a quiet sector near Luneville.

Although there was nothing threatening in the situation and no immediate probability of a serious German offensive, M. Clemenceau wished to know why they could not go in at once. Gen. Sibert told him that the division had been in the area but a short time and had only recently begun training, and that the American commander-in-chief must determine when and where the division should be employed.

M. Clemenceau went on to say that America had now been in the war several months and the French people were wondering when they expected to take an active part. He said that the French army was exhausted by the war and that its morale was poor. He insisted then, as he did with even greater vehemence later on in an official capacity, that it was not so much a question of troops being ready as it was of giving relief to the Allies.

Although the division was only partially trained it could have been used in an emergency, but there was nothing threatening in the situation at this time and no suggestion had been made that it should go into the line for serious work.

Although it was obviously quite out of place for Clemenceau to make any such demand, yet there is little doubt that he gave expression to a very general sentiment among the French people at that moment. They simply wanted to see American troops in the trenches.

I could well understand this attitude of the people, and realized that their morale had been none too high, but it was gradually growing better. The censorship of private letters of soldiers in the French Army showed an improvement, based largely upon the hope of considerable aid from America. Quite apart from sentiment, however, it was a question of having the 1st Division in fair shape before placing it even in a quiet sector, where it would surely become a target which the Germans would utilize to strike a blow at American prestige.

From another point of view, M. Clemenceau's visit left the impression that the French were inclined to dictate what disposition we should make of our units. In many of their suggestions it was easy to see the possibility of amalgamation lurking in the background.

Replacements

Opposition to U. S. Building Up Own Army

Another circumstance that suggested the same thought, the knowledge of which came to me about this time, was that the French High Commissioner at Washington, Andre Tardieu, had reported difficulty in persuading Secretary of War Baker to divert tonnage to send over units other than those designated for our army.

It was difficult to construe his move in any other light than as further evidence of the none to well concealed opposition of the French to our building up an army.

Such methods were, of course, irregular, but nevertheless similar pressure to alter our program was repeatedly used by both Allies before the end of the war. There can be little doubt that both, especially the French, entertained the hope that we would provide them not only with replacements, but with laborers and technical troops as well.

In looking back over the period immediately prior to our entry into the war the very primitive state of our aviation still gives me a feeling of humiliation. The punitive expedition of 1916 went into Mexico with eight of the 13 antiquated tactical planes which constituted our all in aviation.

Those old planes were not in any sense properly equipped as compared with planes being used by other nations even then, and with no adequate facilities for repair work they were constantly in danger of going to pieces, yet the service of our aviators in Mexico stood out strongly as an indication of what American fliers were to accomplish in the World War.

SLOW PROGRESS MADE ON AIR PROGRAM IN U. S.

Failure to Keep Abreast Of Airplane Development Results in Serious Delay

The daring and the courage of men like Townsend Dodd, Foulois, Dargue and others who were with that expedition aroused my most enthusiastic admiration. While there were many hair-breadth escapes in Mexico, fortunately all our fliers were spared to form the nucleus of our World War Aviation Corps, in which they again served with distinction.

Although at the date of our entry into the war more than a year had elapsed since the beginning of the Mexican campaign, there were still only 35 trained fliers and about 1,000 men in aviation, with only a few training planes, none of which were suitable for anything else.

Serious Delay

Caused by Failure to Watch Developments

An extensive program following cabled recommendations from the French premier after we entered the war seems to have been adopted at home as the basis of our efforts. Upon the representations of the chief signal officer, Brig. Gen. George O. Squier, Congress made an appropriation of $640,000,000 in July, 1917, in an effort to overcome past negligence.

Gen. Squier

There soon followed many extravagant claims by prominent civil officials connected with aviation and by the press as to how we were going to have large fleets of planes in operation before the summer was over and end the war at once with a preponderance of aviation.

But Congressional action, even though generous, furnished no magical power to transform our Air Service from a mere skeleton into a real fighting force in an instant. Everybody who stopped a moment to think knew that time would be necessary and that it was idle to count upon airplanes from our own factories within a year, or perhaps longer.

The failure of our aviation bureau to keep abreast of airplane development in the contending armies cost us serious delay.

With a lack of data at the beginning, little progress had been made at home on our aviation program at the end of five months. Fruitless efforts to describe mechanical construction and give definite information concerning production and otherwise reach decisions by cable prompted Washington to send a special mission to France, of which Maj. R. C. Bolling was the head.

Through his ability and expert knowledge he rendered exceptional service in co-operating with those in control of Allied aviation and in furnishing the necessary technical information upon which to base action at home. The investigations made by his mission confirmed the view that our manufacturer could not begin to furnish planes before the summer of 1918. At this time it looked as though we should not even have sufficient planes for training, and much less be able to furnish planes for our troops as they went into the line. With my mind filled with these impression, and realizing the vital importance of aviation, my efforts were unceasing to overcome the deficiency.

Gen. Kenly

Appointed Aviation Chief For A. E. F.

After inquiry as to French capacity to turn out planes, I made a contract with the Air Ministry late in August committing us to an expenditure of $60,000,000 for 5,000 planes and 8,500 engines to be delivered as rapidly as possible at intervals before the first of June, 1918, on condition that we should provide certain tools and raw materials. To make a contract to pay such an amount appeared somewhat bold, but under the circumstances some one had to take the initiative in providing planes needed at once for the development of our air force.

As aviation was in no sense a logical branch of the Signal Corps the two were separated in the A. E. F. as soon as practicable, and aviation was organized and maintained as a distinct force. To co-ordinate our training with that at home, Brig. Gen. William L. Kenly was sent over the latter part of August and was appointed chief of aviation in the A. E. F.

Gen. Kenly

Col. Mitchell, who had succeeded Maj. Dodd, the first chief of aviation, was given jurisdiction over aviation in the zone of advance. Maj. Bolling was placed in charge of aviation in the zone of the interior, and soon succeeded in securing better co-operation through an Inter-Allied Aircraft Board.

The next essential step was the training of airplane pilots, and accordingly arrangements were made for our men to enter flying schools in England, France and in the

Sun-Telegraph $3,000.00

...CASH PRIZE CONTEST...

1. Was there apparent conflict in the instructions given General Pershing when he left for France?

2. Why did General Pershing reject the Vosges front, recommended by the Joffre mission as the sector for the American army, in favor of the Lorraine front?

3. How did the Germans get information of the departure of American transports for France?

The correct answers to these questions will be found in preceding chapters of Pershing's Own Story of the War as printed in the Pittsburgh Sun-Telegraph. Details of the contest will be found in another part of today's Sunday Sun-Telegraph. Do not submit your answers until the complete set of ten test questions has been printed. Question No. 4 will be published next Sunday.

Pershing's Story of the World War

Following is a synopsis of the first 13 chapters of Gen. John J. Pershing's story, "My Experiences in the World War," being published in the daily and Sunday Sun-Telegraph:

On May 3, 1917, four weeks after the United States had declared war on Germany, Gen. Pershing received a telegram from his father-in-law, the late Senator F. E. Warren, asking him if he spoke French. Puzzled, yet suspecting that it meant the possibility of service in France, he answered in the affirmative.

Several days later Pershing went to Washington in response to a summons from the Chief of Staff. He was told he was to command a division. A few days later Secretary of War Baker told him President Wilson had decided to appoint him commander-in-chief of the American forces and bade him choose his staff and prepare to sail as soon as possible.

On May 27 Secretary Baker sent Pershing a letter of instructions. He directed the General to "co-operate with the forces of the other countries" fighting the Germans, but to keep the United States troops as separate and distinct components of the combined forces. At the same time the Chief of Staff handed Pershing a letter directing him to "conduct active operations in conjunction and in co-operation with the French armies."

Pershing and his party sailed from New York the next day on the Baltic. He arrived in England June 8 and, after a series of conferences there with King George and high government officials, left for France on June 13.

It was decided that the Americans should use the ports of Bordeaux and St. Nazaire. The Lorraine front was selected as the sector to be occupied by the Americans, notwithstanding that the Joffre mission in America had suggested we should operate on the Vosges front. Gen. Pershing points out that the selection of the front was largely dependent upon the ports and lines of communication available. The strategical advantages and moral effect of an initial American success on the St. Mihiel salient were evident, while success on the Vosges front could have had no decisive effect.

On July 26 he attended his first meeting of the Allied military leaders. It was agreed that Russia had ceased to be a military factor and that the Germans would be able to renew their activities on the Western Front by spring at the latest.

Pershing received at this time disturbing confidential reports about the shipping losses inflicted by German submarines. It appeared that if the rate of destruction were not reduced the war would be lost before the Americans could fire a shot.

The submarine warfare was proceeding so successfully for the Germans because they were able to get advance information concerning the movements of vessels. The sailing dates of much of our shipping reached Germany through spies. Pershing took steps to stop the holes through which the information was leaking out. The Germans also obtained information from a wireless station in Spain. One message intercepted by the Allies told of the arrival of 10,000 American troops in St. Nazaire.

On August 20 Pershing witnessed a French attack near Verdun. As he passed along the front he unexpectedly ran into a French general with whom he had been associated years before in Manchuria. They had both at that time been with the Japanese army as military observers. Pershing found that the German commander defeated in the French attack that day was also one of the military attaches with whom he had been associated in Manchuria. He learned that $75,000,000 worth of artillery ammunition was expended in the four days' bombardment preceding the infantry assault. The French advanced five kilometers and took 6,000 prisoners.

On August 23 Pershing cabled Washington to urge that an effort be made to destroy the German U-boat bases.

He had difficulty obtaining supplies, as the French did not co-operate satisfactorily. He established a purchasing board with Charles G. Dawes at its head.

In response to his request that a practical railroad man be placed in charge of the lines serving the American Army the War Department sent W. W. Atterbury, of the Pennsylvania Railroad, to France.

Training of the troops was now well under way. Pershing emphasized that they be instructed in the methods of open warfare rather than trench fighting.

The Advantages of Modern Apartment Living

Substantial - Well Defined - Practical

In Pittsburgh and suburban districts today there are modern apartment hotels and apartment buildings containing efficiency housekeeping and bachelor apartments of varied sizes and rental costs that are adapted to perfectly fit the budget of most every family and individual.

The advantages afforded are substantial, well-defined and practical when compared with the ordinary dwelling or apartment house, and also in instances where small families are over-housed in the large old-fashioned homestead. The practical advantages are plainly outstanding. The substantial advantages can be quickly figured in favor of efficiency apartment living.

The modern apartment era is here. It means living at its best that costs no more, and frequently less, than living in non-modern apartments, considering everything involved.

The renting season is just around the corner and those who are at all apartment-minded should investigate the apartments listed below. The information gained will be found enlightening and favorable to modern apartment living.

PERSHING WON'T SEND RAW MEN INTO TRENCHES

Allies Asked U. S. Troops As Replacements, Failed To Convince A. E. F. Chief.

Italy after they had passed their preliminary tests at home. Vacancies were held for us in those schools, but we were unable to take full advantage of this opportunity for training because of the delay in sending over fliers. However, we proceeded with the establishment of our own training centers, the first of which, located at Issoudun, was planned for a capacity of 900 pilots by spring.

Another entry from my diary:

"Chaumont, Thursday, September 6, 1917. Left Paris yesterday morning for Chaumont, stopping at Troyes for lunch. Headquarters offices duly installed here in regimental barracks. Surroundings give relief from depression of Paris. On my invitation President Poincare came this morning to inspect First Division."

Driving to Gondrecourt with my chief of staff and aides, we found Gen. Petain and staff and an escort of French troops drawn up at the station, where President Poincare and his party, including the minister of war, were received with due formality. The president and I led the way by motor to Houdelaincourt, where the ceremony was to be held.

Poincare
Impressed by Appearance Of Soldiers

It was a compliment to the First Division to have a visit from the head of the French Republic, and every man was on his mettle. The troops were already assembled when we arrived. As the president and I walked through the ranks he commented very favorably on the appearance of the men, and was quite struck with their size and their youth and vigor. After the command had marched in review the President asked to meet the officers, and made them a very happy speech. Upon conclusion of his talk they showed their appreciation by promptly giving him three rousing cheers, which pleased him very much.

From the purely military point of view, the impression gained by the President at this review could not have been particularly favorable, as at least four-fifths of the men were recruits and over one-half of the officers had been but recently commissioned. Moreover, the men had been hard at work on combat training, and this, together with the uneven ground of the muddy hillside where the review was held, made military precision difficult. However, he was a very keen observer and no doubt drew great satisfaction from the thought that a few more months of training of this group of 25,000 Americans, together with others yet to come, would one day make a formidable addition to the forces of the war-worn Allies.

Again from my diary:

"Chaumont, Saturday, September 8, 1917. Have seen various officers of missions at my headquarters. Gen. Raguenau, as chief of the French mission, becomes Gen. Petain's representative.

Mr. White

"Miss Elizabeth Hoyt, secretary of the Red Cross, took luncheon with us and gave us an interesting account of its recent activities. Gov. Allen, of Kansas, and William Allen White, also of the Red Cross, came to call."

To maintain closer relations among the Allied armies and keep each commander-in-chief advised regarding the morale, proposed operations and movements of troops of other armies, and in fact all matters that might affect the general situation, a system had grown up whereby the army of each nation was represented at the headquarters of the others by a group of officers called a mission. Consequently, when we definitely established headquarters at Chaumont, we exchanged missions with the British, French, Italian and Belgian armies.

The missions with us, especially those of the French and British, did not always confine their activities to normal lines, but often took occasion to advance their ideas regarding the training and use of our army. The French continuously argued that we would contribute more to the Allied cause by helping to strengthen their units than by building up an independent army of our own, although the British were not far behind their efforts in that direction.

Watchful
To Avoid Commitments On Amalgamation

Knowing this attitude of our French friends, it was necessary to be on the lookout to avoid commitments to suggestions that might eventually involve the question of amalgamation. Apart from this, however, and considering their services as a whole, it should be said that the fine spirit of helpfulness and co-operation by the members of these missions appealed to us, and many close friendships grew out of our associations with them.

My diary says:

"Chaumont, Tuesday, September 11, 1917. On Sunday saw representative of Postal Department sent to organize service for the Armies. Conferred with several staff officers, Dr. Woods Hutchinson called. Chemical Warfare Department, known as 'Gas Service,' established in A. E. F. System of schools for our forces completed.

Gen. Williams

"Conferred yesterday with Gen. Williams; prospect of obtaining tanks not hopeful unless they can be produced at home."

Poison Gas
Use by Germany Forced Adoption by All

The use of poisonous gases in warfare had been discussed at the Hague conference in 1899, with the result that several nations pledged themselves against the employment of projectiles, the only object of which was to give forth suffocating or poisonous gases. This action had created a feeling of security regarding such a possibility.

Germany had subscribed to the agreement, and when her armies disregarded this pledge and became the first to use gas shells, the impression was that they had now thrown every consideration of humanity to the winds.

This action by the enemy forced the Allies to adopt this weapon themselves as a matter of self-protection. From that time on the employment of gas became common to all combatants.

The use of gas in warfare presented an entirely new problem to us, and the organization of a service to handle it demanded immediate attention. The first plan of the War Department provided that the engineers should devise and handle the mechanical features and the medical department the chemical, but this soon proved to be impractical and it became evident that, as we had maintained at the beginning, a separate service would be necessary. Meanwhile application was made for a complete chemical laboratory to be shipped to France for use mainly in investigation, as supplementary to similar work in the states.

Considerable information concerning gases and the organization of gas troops had been gathered by my staff and on August 18, Lieut. Col. Amos A. Fries was designated as chief of the gas service. He made some further investigation of the subject in the British and French armies, and, as a result, an order issued September 3 established a department known at that time as the Gas Service.

Col. Fries

Experiments were at once begun to discover new gases and devise improvements in gas masks. To save tonnage and avoid the dangers of explosion in transit, it was decided, after consultation with the Allied services, to request the shipment from the states of the basic elements and manufacture the chemical products in France. After thorough tests of different types of gas masks we adopted the box respirator used by the British, and a preliminary purchase of 100,000 was made to meet immediate demands for training.

With the development of trench weapons and special tactical methods of defense, never had the offensive been more costly in human life than in this war. The ingenuity of the Allies was put to the test to devise new engines of war that would make the attack possible without excessive losses.

While the tank, which was simply an armored caterpillar traction motor car, was favored by many officers as an aid to advancing infantry, this opinion was by no means unanimous. Our investigations, however, led to the conclusion that we should accept Allied experience and also adopt the tank as a weapon.

Both the French (light) Renault, weighing six tons, and the British (heavy) Mark VI tanks of 30 tons, appeared useful according to circumstances, and it was estimated that we should have at least 1,200 of the former and 600 of the latter.

Negotiations for their procurement were begun with the respective governments, and it was found that the French wanted us to manufacture 2,000 Renaults for them. As there was little or no prospect of our obtaining tanks abroad, their manufacture at home was recommended and full details of requirements were accordingly cabled to Washington.

(Tomorrow: Pershing celebrates fifty-seventh birthday, but notes little progress in getting our army assembled.)

"When I married you, I meant every word I said in front of that minister. I love you, and intend to make you a good wife."

Here are REAL LIFE experiences which every young couple must face, problems that require mutual concessions and adjustments.

Should a young woman hold her job in the business world after she marries? Is there any reflection upon her husband if she does so?

Should a wife continue her friendships with other men after her marriage?

If a young husband invites his former fiancee home to dinner, which his bride must cook, has the bride any good reason to protest?

How far should a wife go in being "nice" to important customers?

These are PRESENT DAY problems that thousands of young men and women meet every year, and which will interest other thousands who have met them in some fashion in the past, or will have to in the future.

SAXTON, REALTY VETERAN, TO BE BURIED MONDAY

Wife, Ill in Hospital, Not Told Of His Death. End Came In His Hotel Suite Here.

Funeral services will be held at 2:30 o'clock Monday in Sawdon's funeral home in Negley avenue for C. L. Saxton, 54, veteran real estate operator and president of the C. L. Saxton Company, who died following a sudden heart attack yesterday in his suite in the Hotel William Penn. Interment will be in Allegheny Cemetery.

Mr. Saxton

For two years Mr. Saxton had been in ill health, and it is believed his condition was aggravated by the critical illness of his wife, who is confined in West Penn Hospital. Mrs. Saxton, who was operated on Friday, has not been told of her husband's death.

Mr. Saxton was two years old when his parents moved to Edgeworth from his birthplace at Frankford Springs, Washington County. His career in real estate began 34 years ago with W. L. Scott & Co. In 1910 he founded the C. L. Saxton Co. A few years ago, at the death of Oliver Hugh, Mr. Saxton dissolved a brokerage firm in which Mr. Pugh was his partner.

Mr. Saxton had lived in Hotel William Penn since it was built. He also had a summer home at Valencia.

He was a member of the Pittsburgh Athletic Association, Pittsburgh Real Estate Board, Union Club, Fellowship Lodge of Masons, No. 1 Commandery, Knights Templar, and Syria Temple Shrine.

He leaves his widow and a daughter, Mrs. Kathleen Montague, of Philadelphia; a sister, Mrs. Lee Warthman, of Erie, and two brothers, J. W. Saxton, who was with him when he died, and G. B. Saxton.

RECORD CROWD AT AUTO SHOW

The 1931 Automobile Show closed last night after breaking all records for the week's attendance and topping off an eight day run with a record Saturday night attendance of 7,000 paid admissions.

The week's attendance was judged at between 40,000 and 50,000 persons. The largest crowd in the history of the shows appeared at Motor Square Garden Thursday night, with 8,500 persons.

Mrs. Frank J. Schick, Maple avenue extension, Coraopolis, was presented with an Oldsmobile DeLuxe Sedan when her name was drawn from among approximately 12,000 others by Evelyn Metzgar, 10. Mrs. Schick's was the third name to be selected; hers was drawn after Mrs. J. Cooper, 344 Academy avenue, Carnegie, and John V. Kravnak, 21 Patterson avenue, Duquesne, failed to claim their tickets.

Mrs. Schick, just before driving her car from the floor, said:

"I was so surprised. I dropped my stub in the box at 9:45; at 10 p. m., my name was announced as winner. We have a car, but we were going to buy another, anyhow."

WELFARE DRIVE TO BE PLANNED

Plans for the first finance campaign in five years will be discussed by members and directors of the Federation of Jewish Philanthropies who will meet tonight in the Young Men's and Women's Hebrew Association, Oakland.

Dr. Solomon Lowenstein, of New York, executive director of the Federation for the Support of Jewish Philanthropic Societies in New York City, will be the principal speaker. Alfred M. Oppenheimer, president of the local federation, also will speak. Directors will be elected. An interesting program of entertainment will feature Miss Pescha Kagan, concert pianiste.

The federation, founded in 1912 as a Jewish community chest for the greater Pittsburgh district, comprises 17 agencies which administer every form of welfare, particularly family relief. Beginning this year the federation's work will be financed annually, instead of irregularly as hitherto. Rabbi Goodman A. Rose will open the meeting tonight and Dr. Samuel H. Goldenson will give the benediction.

Dr. Ludwig B. Bernstein is executive director of the federation.

HOOVER STUDIES CASH PAYMENT OF VETS' BONUS

President Awaits Legion's Decision; Backers Win Fight for Senate Hearing.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 24. President Hoover is studying the proposals for cashing the World War veterans' compensation certificates, and a definite stand is slated to be announced in a few days.

The decision of the American Legion executive committee meeting tomorrow in Indianapolis as to whether that organization desires to go on record favoring either a partial or full payment of the certificates is being awaited.

Meanwhile, backers of the cash payment plan won a victory today when Senator Smoot, (Rep.), of Utah, chairman of the finance committee, announced hearings would be held on the proposal Monday.

Representative Hawley, (Rep.), of Oregon, chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, indicated he might also grant hearings on the plan. Thus far he has resisted all efforts of advocates to gain a hearing.

FIGHT REDOUBLED

With this preliminary gain the congressional leaders in the fight for cash payment promised to redouble their efforts to force a bill through this session.

The Senate Committee, Smoot said, will consider bills by Senators Brookhart (Rep.), of Iowa, Vandenberg (Rep.), of Michigan, Dill (Dem.), of Washington, and Barkley (Dem.), of Kentucky.

Smoot's action was praised by Representative Patman (Dem.), of Texas, who has pioneered the movement in the House. He asserted:

"It shows that the House is more under the control of Secretary Mellon than the Senate."

RELIEF MEASURE

Payment in cash of the insurance certificates given to veterans in the so-called bonus have been urged as a means of aiding veterans now in distress, and at the same time stimulating business by putting two or three billion dollars in circulation.

Secretary Mellon has opposed the legislation on the ground that Congress should preserve the insurance features for the veterans, that any business stimulation would be but temporory, and that harm would be done by causing the government to attempt to float at least two billion dollars worth of bonds.

VETS HERE APPROVE

The Capt. F. P. Siviter Post No. 87, Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States, has gone on record as favoring the movement recently started by United States Congressman Wright Patman for immediate cash payment of World War adjusted compensation certificates.

The post declared 75 per cent of its members are in immediate need of the money, as a result of the economic depression. They also said payment now would aid in ending the depression.

Congress Asked To Buy Picture of Famous War Dog

WASHINGTON, Jan. 24.—(INS.)—A bill for purchase of a painting of "Stubby," famous war dog of the 26th Division, to be included in the nation's relics of the World War, was introduced in the House today by Representative Connery (Dem.), of Massachusetts.

The bill authorizes expenditure of $1,000 for the painting by the late Charles Ayers Whipple, a Capitol artist.

"Stubby," a Boston bull, joined the 102nd Infantry of the 26th Division at Yale Field, went through four offenses in France, was wounded and was decorated by Gen. Pershing.

When the dog died in Washington he was given a military funeral by former ex-soldiers of the Yankee Divfsion.

Gov. Ritchie's Aged Mother, Long Ill, Dies

ANNAPOLIS, Md., Jan. 24.—(AP.)—Mrs. Elizabeth Cabell Ritchie, aged mother of Gov. Albert C. Ritchie, died at the executive mansion today.

In feeble health for years, Mrs. Ritchie was unable to attend the ceremonies last week when her son, the only man to be re-elected governor of Maryland, was inaugurated for the fourth time. Mrs. Ritchie was the granddaughter of a Virginia governor, William H. Cabell, and the wife of a judge of the Supreme bench of Baltimore City. James Branch Cabell, the author, is a nephew.

Blood Cell Protein Serums
Means Heritage for the World
What Is More Valuable ?

"Heritage, My Children—Is the Greatest Word in Our Language"

ALL human development is dependent upon the health of the people. All future remedies will be to build up and increase the blood cell. Health is wealth. Pure blood is the first requisite to perfect health. We all know that the blood is the life; it contains the essential nutritive elements, organic and mineral, required for the maintenance of function and structure. Both organic and mineral constituents are derived from the food eaten from day to day, and most all chronic ailments as well as susceptibility to acute infections can be traced directly to a deficiency in the dietary. This is well illustrated in rickets, scurvy and multiple neuritis, and probably the same is true of cancer and tuberculosis. It is also a well-known fact that unsuitable food leads to debility, hence many persons suffer from debility, due to bad digestion, and yet have food in abundance. They are victims of impaired digestive capacity and bacterial infection, persistent and self perpetuating.

Why Drug the Stomach When Your Blood Cells Control High Blood Pressure and Most All Chronic Diseases?

The blood stream is merely the medium through which these energies float and carry on their duties. If the stream is thick and slovenly, if engorged, swollen, contracted or tortuous, is not the function hampered or arrested as the case may be? A clot in the brain—apoplexy. If a stoppage in the lungs or limbs—dropsy. If in the brain—paralysis. If in the heart—sudden death. If too much blood—vertigo, insomnia. Repeated colds, low vitality, due to faulty blood. The germs themselves are harmless, but the toxins formed by them produce the poisoning. If an infection takes place, what suffers? The blood. In fever, where is temperature the hirhest? In the blood. In malaria, where is the germ? In the blood. In diphtheria, smallpox, rheumatism, gout—nearly all infections find their seat in the blood stream. Don't you believe it is time to give some special thought to these basic facts and eliminate this stomach drugging, which you know is wrong, perfecting the one only sure and effective avenue of medication—the blood stream.

Lack of Protein Hinders Cells' Work

Chemical analysis and physiological investigation establishes the living principle in the protoplasmic cell — the physical unit in both animal and plant life. When the body cells undergo degenerative changes in Bright's Disease, arteriosclerosis and in all chronic diseases, we find distinct and demonstrable evidence of impairment in nutrition.

STOMACH UPSET

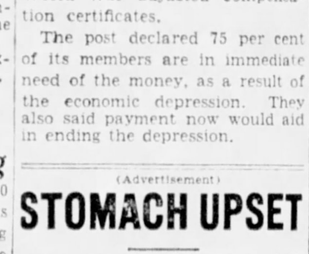
Get at the real cause. That's what thousands of stomach sufferers are doing now. Instead of taking tonics or trying to patch up a poor digestion, they are attacking the real cause of the ailment—clogged liver and disordered bowels.

Dr. Edwards Olive Tablets help arouse the liver in a soothing, healing way. When the liver and bowels are performing their natural functions, people rarely suffer from indigestion and stomach troubles.

Have you a bad taste, coated tongue, poor appetite, a lazy, don't-care-feeling, no ambition or energy, trouble with undigested foods? Try Olive Tablets, the substitute for calomel.

Dr. Edwards Olive Tablets are a purely vegetable compound. Know them by their olive color. They do the work without griping, cramps or pain. All druggists, 15c, 30c and 60c.

Take one or two at bedtime for quick relief. Eat what you like.



INDIGESTION
Two Minute Relief!

Have you ever tried Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets? If not you should do so and perhaps find the relief you have long sought.

These tablets were first placed on sale in drug stores in December, 1894, thirty-six years ago, and have steadily increased in popularity ever since as attested by millions of users.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets contain no soda nor any harmful ingredient, but the desired alkaline effect is secured by a pleasant combination of Magnesia and Calcium Carbonate with other ingredients for the prompt relief of that acidity, discomfort after eating, nausea, fullness after meals, etc. They are a modern anti-acid. One of them will neutralize 2½ times its weight of acid material in the stomach.

Make This Test!

Purchase a 25c, handy pocket tin of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets from your druggist, use after meals and note the quick relief from gas and discomfort of over-eating.

Buy baby a doll with that $3 you save

There are so many things you can buy baby with that $3 you save by using Listerine Tooth Paste at 25¢ instead of dentifrices in the 50¢ class. A doll is merely a suggestion.

Are your children using the correct TOOTH PASTE?

Perhaps you have wondered why so many thousands of mothers use only Listerine Tooth Paste on children's teeth whether temporary or permanent.

The reason is that this remarkable dentifrice at 25¢ is amazingly gentle in action. Countless tests prove it safe for the most delicate teeth. Contrast its performance with ordinary dentifrices containing harsh, gritty abrasives.

The cleansing and polishing agents in Listerine Tooth Paste that give teeth such soundness and brilliant luster are softer than tooth enamel. Therefore they cannot harm it. But they are harder than tartar and consequently remove it easily.

Baby teeth and permanent teeth brushed with this gentle dentifrice show none of the fissures, cracks, and scars left by ordinary tooth pastes.

Begin using Listerine Tooth Paste on your children's teeth as well as your own. See how clean it leaves them. How brilliant. And note the wonderful feeling of freshness and invigoration it imparts to the mouth.

Incidentally, at 25 cents this paste saves about $3 a year over dentifrices in the 50 cent class. Lambert Pharmacal Company.

THE PITTSBURGH SUN-TELEGRAPH today announces the "Old Glory" contest, a new and unique event. It is entertaining, instructive and profitable.

The "Old Glory" is a historical picture contest for which $2,500 in cash awards will be made to men, women and children who know their American history.

If you can identify the pictures of historic incidents which played important parts in the development of this country you may win one of the prizes.

Each week for ten successive weeks the Sun-Telegraph will award 35 cash prizes totaling $250.00 to winners of the contest. The first of the series of picture puzzles appears herewith.

If you want to test your knowledge of American history start this contest today.

All you have to do is to state the historic event the various pictures represent and give the dates of the events. Be accurate and neat in preparing your solutions.

Get into this great historical contest today. It's open to every one and you can compete in each of the ten weekly contests.

While some events pictured in the "Old Glory" Contest did not actually occur on American soil, nevertheless they did play an important part in the destiny of the country.

PRIZE LIST

The following prizes—totaling $250.00 — will be awarded each week for ten successive weeks to winners under the rules of the contest:

1st prize	$ 60.00
2nd prize	30.00
3rd prize	25.00
4th prize	20.00
5th prize	15.00
10 prizes of $5 ea.	50.00
20 prizes of $2.50 each	50.00
Total	$250.00

FOLLOW THESE RULES

RULE 1. A group of twelve (12) pictures will be published by the Sun-Telegraph each week for ten (10) consecutive weeks, beginning January 25, 1931. Each such group of pictures will constitute a separate and complete contest. Each picture will depict a historical or romantic event in the development of America. With each week's twelve (12) pictures, the Sun-Telegraph will publish a list of historic and romantic events, which list will include the correct answers to each such twelve (12) pictures.

RULE 2. In these ten (10) contests the Sun-Telegraph will pay a total of $2,500.00 to successful contestants, $250.00 of this amount being awarded in cash prizes for solutions of each weekly contest in accordance with these rules and schedule of prizes which appears on this page.

RULE 3. A space beneath each pictures will be provided in which contestants are to write the name and date of the event depicted. All pictures for each week must be answered and only one (1) solution for each picture may be given. No one person may send in more than one (1) set of pictures and answers in any one (1) weekly contest.

RULE 4. It is not necessary that you buy a copy of the Sun-Telegraph or that you be a subscriber. When writing on pictures clipped from this newspaper do not use ink; ink blurs on newspaper.

RULE 5. Those who may enter: Any person residing in the Pennsylvania, Ohio, West Virginia, western part of Maryland, western part of Virginia, western part of New York, except an employee or representative of the Sun-Telegraph or any other Hearst newspaper.

RULE 6. Contestants may trace or copy the pictures, or may clip the pictures from this newspaper. Each complete set or weekly group of pictures and answers to such pictures in any weekly contest bound together or mounted or colored must be delivered to the place of business of the Sun-Telegraph, in care of "Old Glory Contest," at Telegraph Square, Pittsburgh, Pa., on or before 11 P. M. on Monday, Feb. 2, 1931, or, if mailed, must be sent by first-class mail, postage fully prepaid, and must be received at said place of business of the Sun-Telegraph, Telegraph Square, Pittsburgh, Pa., on or before 11 P. M. on Monday, Feb. 2, 1931. Contestant's name and address and the number of the weekly contest to which such answers relate MUST be plainly written on the back of the package or envelope in which the pictures and answers are transmitted, as well as upon the entry itself, which is enclosed in such package or envelope. The dimensions of such package or envelope shall not exceed three inches by nine inches by eleven inches. A duplicate complete list of the answers thus transmitted must be retained by the contestant.

RULE 7. The Sun-Telegraph will publish the correct solution to Old Glory Contest No. 1 Sunday, Feb. 8, 1931, which solution each contestant should compare with the duplicate list of his answers which he has retained. If upon such comparison the contestant finds that his answers contain not more than three (3) errors, he shall address a postcard or telegram to the Sun-Telegraph, in care of "Old Glory Contest," Telegraph Square, Pittsburgh, Pa., reading as follows: "I have made only (here state number of errors), errors in Old Glory Contest No. (here state contest number)." The contestant's name and address must be plainly written or printed below. The postcard or telegram must be received at the place of business of the Sun-Telegraph, Telegraph Square, Pittsburgh, Pa., not later than 11 P. M. on Friday, Feb. 13, 1931. The winners of Old Glory Contest No. 1 will be published in the Sun-Telegraph Sunday, Feb. 22, 1931, or as soon thereafter as possible. The Sun-Telegraph shall not be bound by any statement in any such postcard or telegram, but no weekly group of pictures and answers will be considered unless such a postcard or telegram shall thereafter be received within the time limit specified above from the contestant transmitting the same. Any false statement in any such postcard or telegram may disqualify the contestant named therein from further participation or consideration not only in such weekly contest but also in any previous or subsequent "Old Glory Contest."

RULE 8. In each weekly contest the contestant who submits the largest number of correct answers will receive the first prize. The contestant who submits the second largest number of correct answers will receive the second prize, and so on. In case two (2) or more contestants are tied, i.e., have an equal number of correct answers, the correctness of spelling, neatness and appropriateness of binding, mounting and coloring shall (in the order named), be the determining factors by which the judges shall decide the winners from among such tied contestants. If when judged by these standards it is decided that two (2) or more sets or weekly groups of pictures and answers are equal in merit, then the prize awarded each such tied contestant shall be the amount which would have been awarded had there been no tie.

RULE 9. Three (3) judges, not connected with the Sun-Telegraph, will be selected by the Sun-Telegraph, to award the prizes and their identity will be made known prior to or at the time of the announcement of the awards. Every contestant expressly agrees that the decision of a majority of these judges on all matters submitted and their interpretation of these rules shall be final, conclusive and binding on every contestant.

RULE 10. The Sun-Telegraph reserves the right to reject any solution which is not submitted in accordance with these rules and to correct typographical or other errors which may appear inadvertently in any announcement concerning this contest or any publication of these rules. Upon the completion of one (1) weekly contest, the rules which are to govern a subsequent weekly contest may be altered or amended by the Sun-Telegraph at any time prior to the publication of the pictures in such subsequent weekly contest.

RULE 11. The Sun-Telegraph will not be responsible for the loss of any set or weekly group of pictures and answers submitted in this contest and all such sets or groups of pictures and answers submitted shall become the property of the Sun-Telegraph. No sets or groups of pictures and answers will be returned to any contestant. The Sun-Telegraph shall be under no obligation to answer any inquiries, by letter, telephone, or otherwise, concerning any weekly contest or the results thereof or any award therein.

URGE SENATE QUIZ IN POWER BOARD OUSTERS

Wheeler Hints Higher Up Participated in Action Fight Goes to Hoover

WASHINGTON, Jan. 24 (AP).—A determined Senate majority prepared today to carry on its fight with President Hoover for removal of three members of the new power commission.

While a resolution to bring a court test of the President's right to retain the three officials awaited final action in the Senate Judiciary Committee, Senator Wheeler, Dem., Montana, in charge of the investigation by the Interstate Commerce Committee of utilities utterances surrounding the resignations of the commissioners, Charles A. Russell, Thomas Woodlock and William V. King, who were reinstated.

SEEK "HIGHER-UPS"

The nominations of the three commissioners—Chairman Smith and Commissioners Draper and Garsaud—were recommitted by the Senate yesterday to the committee by 45 to 32.

Wheeler said he would ask Chairman Couzens to call the three commissioners for questioning on the dismissal of the two employes.

The Montana senator also said he would ask that the committee call for all correspondence in the commission's files which might show whether any one in higher authority had anything to do with the dismissals.

The Judiciary Committee is scheduled to consider on Monday the resolution which provides for carrying the case to the court.

Senator Walsh, Dem., Montana, author of the resolution and other working with him for recall of the power nominations expressed confidence today the resolution would be approved.

ROVER IN DOUBT

Nine of the 17 members of the committee voted with Walsh yesterday, indicating they will support his proposal.

The resolution would authorize District Attorney Rover here to institute legal action to test the Senate's right to reconsider the nomination. It also would direct the Judiciary Committee to select counsel to represent the Senate and to collaborate with Rover in preparation of the suit.

Rover said today he had formed no opinion on the resolution or possible action under it.

South Side Church's Shrine Boxes Looted

Two unidentified men entered St. John's Evangelical Catholic Church, South Side, early yesterday, broke open the money boxes at the shrines of St. Anthony and Sacred Heart, and escaped with about $35. Mrs. John Kunkel, wife of the janitor, saw the men escaping.

Advises Flaxolyn For Quick Action On Stomach, Liver, Kidneys and Bowels

Dr. Wm. B. Schmees, Cincinnati, Ohio, like so many other doctors retained to give their expert opinion on the merits of Flaxolyn, gives Flaxolyn his highest praise.

Recommends It to All Who Need a Good Natural Remedy for Constipation

"I have used Flaxolyn with wonderful results. Write for my letter in a personal letter to the founder of Flaxolyn. He quite a few times and he was very much interested and am glad to recommend it to anyone who has to resort to some kind of remedy for constipation. I have also similar results. I believe Flaxolyn is far superior to any preparation of its kind."

Even Hospital Treatment Didn't Help This Pa. Man

—But Flaxolyn Proved to Be What He Needed

"I had been in the hospital in Altoona for two weeks and Mr. Wilson, of Hollidaysburg, Pa., 'I got no relief from the treatment. I was as miserable as ever when my friend, who was in the hospital, came to see me. Since I started taking felt better and have had no sick spell since. I cannot praise Flaxolyn too much.'"

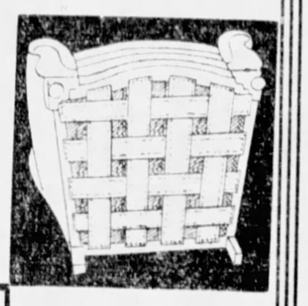
GUARANTEED 10 YEARS

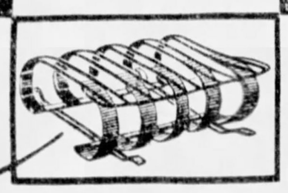
The manufacturer and May-Stern & Co. both guarantee every "Flexsteel" spring against defects of any kind for a period of 10 years.



THE NEW

"Flexsteel" Construction

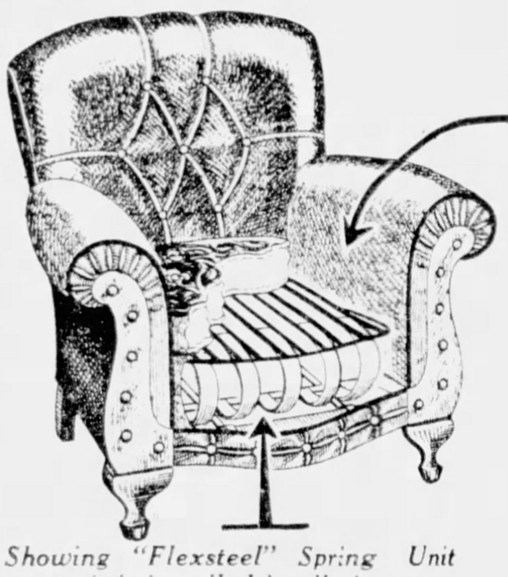
The finest spring steel riveted into one flexible wire unit, interwoven like modern Open bottom permits free circulation of dust & similar



THE OLD

Web Bottom Construction

All webbing sags, pulls free at the ends, gradually the entire suite begins to droop. There is nothing about a web bottom that can ensure permanency.



Showing "Flexsteel" Spring Unit as it is installed in all pieces

Why "Flexsteel" Construction Is Better

1. No webbing to stretch, no cords to break and no tacks to pull out of frames. "Flexsteel" springs are a compact unit.
2. "Flexsteel" springs rest ON TOP of the frame, held in place by screws. Your weight is supported by flat steel springs securely riveted — not by cloth webbing.
3. Open to view and to circulation of air. Easy to clean. There is NO space for moths, dust or germs to collect.
4. No coil springs, tied together with rope which chafes and breaks. "Flexsteel" is practically unbreakable and guaranteed not to sag for 10 years.
5. Double arch springs, reinforced with snubbers, insure luxurious depth and everlasting flexibility.
6. Noiseless, because there is no friction of securely riveted joints—a single compact spring unit. All parts work together.
7. Will never break down and cause lumpiness of the cushion. Flat spring surfaces protect upholstering and preserve its life.
8. The "strength" is built right into "Flexsteel" so that it will probably outlast the upholstering and the frame itself—a lifetime of service.
9. Springs are made of the highest grade spring steel whose elastic limits run approximately 212,000 pounds per square inch.
10. Nothing to wear out or break, thus guaranteeing perfect satisfaction.

By CARL W. SHATTO.

Duke McCurry and Gordy Fraser, a couple of iron men who like their hockey rough, put a liberal portion of poison in the Bulldogs' meat as the Yellow Jackets added to their longest success string of the season by handing Windsor a 2-1 defeat at Duquesne Garden last night.

When the local skaters were trailing by a goal in the second period, McCurry, affectionately known as the Iron Duke, backhanded the puck past Clint Benedict, oldest of active goalies, to knot the count and Fraser sent the fans into hysterics by caging the victory marker on a solo effort less than three minutes before the close of the second stanza.

ENHANCE POSITION

The triumph enabled the fast-going Pittsburgh stick-and-skate artists to complete their fifth game without a defeat. One tie, with Buffalo's International League leaders, is sandwiched in among their four victories. The win also enabled the Jackets to advance to within two games of Windsor and London, joint holders of second and third places in the league standings.

The battle, which compared favorably with the season's most thrilling here, attracted another capacity crowd. All of the seats in the arena were filled long before game time and standing room was at a premium when the teams came out to warm up. When the first stanza was ended the fans were packed solidly against the walls. The Garden's capacity is said to be 7,100, so the attendance was no less than that figure.

The Bulldogs, who fought valiantly right up to the final, gave the thrilling joust a dramatic touch by taking the lead about the middle of the first period. Haynes, speedy and aggressive center, took a neat pass from Robinson, the league's leading scorer, to dent the cords of the Pittsburgh net. Haynes was only about three feet in front of Goalie Albie Cox when he received the

Jack Dempsey, Sharkey Make Up by 'Phone

NEW YORK, Jan. 24.—(AP.)—Jack Sharkey and Jack Dempsey, two of boxing's bitter feudists, have made up again by telephone, just to be sure.

Sharkey called the Polyclinic Hospital this morning to convey his sympathies to the former champion, suffering from an infected finger, and found Dempsey had checked out. Dempsey wasn't at his hotel either, but he phoned Sharkey as soon as he heard the Boston gob was seeking him.

Dempsey assured Sharkey the story published in the Ring, a boxing magazine, under his name, was all a mistake and he never wrote that he could knock Sharkey out any time he wanted to. Dempsey said he never wrote and never saw it before it was printed, although the Ring was authorized to use his name. They swapped mutual admirations and hung up, the best of friends again.

ST. AUGUSTINE, Fla., Jan. 24.—(AP.)—Carl Dann, Jr., youthful Rollins College star and medalist, won the Florida East Coast men's golf tournament here today by eliminating E. T. MacGovern, of Great Barrington, Mass., 8 and 7, in the final 36-hole match.

AUGUSTUS IN FINAL

BELLEAIR, Fla., Jan. 24.—(AP.)—Garret A. Hobart, of Paterson, N. J., and Ellsworth Augustus, of Cleveland, today fought their way to the final round of the annual Belleair January golf tournament.

Hobart, the medalist, eliminated J. R. Monroe, of East Orange, N. J., 5 and 4, and Augustus triumphed over F. W. French by the same margin in the semi-finals.

GUILDAHL, MANERO WIN

HOLLYWOOD, Jan. 24.—(INS.)—Ralph Guldahl and Tony Manero won their way into the final round, late today by defeating Fred Morrison and Mortie Dutra respectively in the semi-final round of the $5,000 Open Golf tournament sponsored by executives of the motion picture industry.

The victors in today's hard-fought round are to play a 36-hole final tomorrow at the Riviera Country Club.

A strong wind swept the course as the quarter-final matches were played. Guldahl defeated Olin Dutra, Santa Monica, 1 up; Morrison defeated Neil Christian, Portland, Ore., 6 and 5; Manero defeated Erick Seavall, Los Angeles, 5 and 4; Mortie Dutra defeated Clarence Clark, Tulsa, Okla., 4 and 3.

WESTON HIGH BEATEN

FAIRMONT, W. Va., Jan. 24.—Weston High was no match for Fairmont High here tonight, the Bears defeating the Lewis Countians by a score of 35-15. The score at the end of the half was 15-2. Weston played better in the latter periods, but never came closer than six points.

GENEVA STAGES RALLY TO BEAT CARNEGIE FIVE

Tartans Unable to Hold 10-Point Advantage and Bow To Covenanters, 32-27.

Skibos Completely Checked In Final Half; Loss of Stentz Hurts Plaid.

BEAVER FALLS, Pa., Jan. 24.—Geneva College, victim of several bad breaks in their last five floor games, came through heer this evening to defeat Carnegie Tech, 32 to 27.

Carnegie got off to a 10-point lead in the first half before Geneva even got started, but Kenny Leoffler's club fought right back and before the first half was over had the score tied at 14 points and the first half ended, 19-17 in Tech's favor.

In the second half Tech was bottled up completely and scored only one field goal and six fouls for eight points, while the Covenanters scored 15 points.

In the first half Tech lost Stentz via the personal foul route, which was a bad blow to Carnegie, but in the last half Geneva fans saw Aultman, Montgomery and Sole all leave the game as they reached the maximum count of four fouls.

After the Skibos had pulled away a ten-point lead, the Covenanters started an uphill climb to overtake the Pittsburghers. Led by Aultman and Montgomery the locals gradually reduced the Tartans' lead to two points at 14-12. With three minutes of the first half remaining, Aultman tied up the game with a field goal and then put his team ahead by two points by sinking another.

Leonard, however, came through with a basket and one out of two fouls to give Tech the lead. Stentz left the game on fouls at this stage. Aultman making the point to again deadlock the score. Smith came through with two fouls to give Tech a 19-17 lead at the end of the half.

In the final half, Carnegie was unable to penetrate the Geneva defense, while the Covenanters once they got their bearings could not be stopped. The lineup:

Carnegie		Geneva
Smith	F	Manning
Nease (C)	F	Fair
Stentz	C	Sole
Fergus	G	Montgomery
Leonard	G	Aultman

Scoring by periods:

Carnegie	10	9	8	27
Geneva	4	14	14	32

Field goals: Carnegie, Smith 4, Nease, Stentz, Leonard, Geneva, Manning, Fair, Montgomery 4, Aultman 4, Grahame. Free throws: Carnegie, 11 out of 20; Geneva, 12 out of 18.

Individual fouls: Carnegie, Smith 4 out of 4, Nease 1 out of 4, Stentz 4 out of 4, Merten 1 out of 2, Fergus 2 out of 4, Leonard 2 out of 4, Geneva, Manning 4 out of 4, Martin 0 out of 2, Fair 3 out of 4, Sole 4 out of 4, Montgomery 4 out of 4, Aultman 1 out of 1, Grahame 0 out of 1.

Referee, Beggs; Snyder, Umpire, Allison.

PLEBES WIN, 36-21

The Carnegie Tech Plebes defeated the Geneva Reserves in the preliminary game, 36 to 21. Louis Jagnow featured for the winners, scoring 16 points on five field goals and six fouls. The lineup:

Tech Plebes (36)		Geneva Res. (21)
Jagnow	F	Hemphill
Silverman	F	Sauer
Edelblut	C	Schmitz
Paulonavich	G	Stewart
Kreedel	G	Noonan

Score by periods:

Carnegie Plebes	8	2	13	13—36
Geneva Reserves	3	8	4	6—21

Time of periods, 10 minutes.

Substitutions: Stewart for Silverman, Evans for Hemphill, Silverman for Stewart, Hemphill for Sauer, Stewart for Silverman, Aiken for Noonan, Sauer for Schmitz, Schmitz for Sauer, Noonan for Aiken, Hunter for Kreedel, Noonan for Hemphill, Kreedel for Jagnow 3, Silverman 2, Edelblut 3, Kreedel 1, Stewart 1, Sauer 2, Schmitz 2, Noonan 2, Eccles 1, Louis, Carnegie 1 out of 11, Geneva Reserves, 12 out of 21. NELSON WINS SHOOT

PINEHURST, N. C., Jan. 24.—A. L. Nelson, of Detroit, today won the final competition in the mid-winter target tournament, scoring 49 out of a possible 100 in a consolation handicap from the 19-yard mark.

PIRATES' YOUNG STRIKEOUT KING

WOOD.—Charley (Spades) Wood, left-hand mound star of the Pirates, whose history in baseball reads like a chapter from an Horatio Alger story. He came to the Pirates from Wichita last season with a record of 22 victories and three defeats. He has a great curve ball and pitched several no-hit games in his high school days.

Phillies Sign Tony Plansky

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 24.—(AP.)—Anthony J. Plansky, famous athlete of Georgetown University a few years ago, today was signed by the Philadelphia Nationals and will join the club late next month at the training base at Winter Haven, Fla. Officials of the Phillies announced his purchase tonight.

Last year, Plansky was an outfielder and first baseman with the Erie Central League Club, but the berth selected for him with the Phils is left or center field. Kline will remain in right field for the Quakers.

With Erie, after a trial by Boston and Buffalo, Plansky hit at a .337 clip last season. He is young, stands 6 feet 2 and weighs 214.

Plansky is best known here as an all-round athlete. Wearing the Blue and White of Georgetown, he won three National Decathlon championships at Franklin Field and college coaches ranked him the equal if not a shade higher than the late Bob Legendre, who died in Brooklyn a few days ago. As a halfback he was ranked one of Georgetown's greatest football warriors.

POTZI WINS MATCH

NEW YORK, Jan. 24.—(AP.)—Andrew Potzi, of Philadelphia, defeated Marcel Camp, of Detroit, by 70 points in their special 18-balkline pocket billiards match, completed here tonight. The final score was Potzi 1,500, Camp 1,430.

MARSHALL FIVE WINS

HUNTINGTON, W. Va., Jan. 24.—(AP.)—Marshall College won on the long end of a 43-32 score here tonight in a basketball game with New River State. The first half ended 16-all.

EDDIE MORGAN TO QUIT GAME

NEW ORLEANS, Jan. 24.—(AP.)—Eddie Morgan announced today he would quit slugging baseballs and start making boxes.

The Cleveland first baseman said he had decided definitely to retire from baseball, but some of his friends believed he would relent in the spring.

His action was prompted by the contract offered him for 1931 by the Indians which he said contained a disappointing salary. He declined to name the figure, but it was understood he expected $15,000.

If he persists in his attitude, Morgan will desert the diamond at the peak of his career and after a brilliant year as first baseman with the Indians in which he stood among the seven hardest hitters of the American League.

"Just figure it out for yourself," Morgan said. "I am giving the better part of my life to baseball. I can't go on forever. Where will I be when I have run my race—nowhere. Then it will be too late to learn a new business.

"There is only one alternative in baseball. If you can make enough money in it to support yourself comfortably at a later date, O. K. After such a season as last year and after the terms offered me by Cleveland for 1931 I am now fully convinced that it is folly for me to stick to baseball when I can make more money and establish myself solidly in a substantial business."

Morgan said he already had joined his father in the operation of a box factory and that he believed that making boxes would be about as interesting as making home runs.

INDIANS NOT ALARMED

CLEVELAND, Jan. 24.—(AP.)—Billy Evans, general manager of the Cleveland American League Baseball Club, said tonight that if Eddie Morgan, slugging first baseman, "can make more money in the box business than in baseball, I don't blame him for quitting the game and I wish him success."

That was the only comment coming from Cleveland officials regarding Morgan's declaration that he was retiring to go into his father's box business in the South.

The club announced that Luke Sewell, veteran first-string catcher, had come to terms after returning his first contract unsigned.

CAPT. ARTURE HERO IN 28-20 FLOOR VICTORY

Willie Scores Three Field Goals in Succession to Clinch Game for Panthers.

W. Kowallis Also Tallies in Extra Frame—Count 20-20 in Regulation Time.

NOTRE DAME, Ind., Jan. 24.—The University of Pittsburgh's Panthers made it three straight victories over the University of Notre Dame basketball team here tonight, defeating the Irish, 28-20, when Capt. Willie Arture ran wild in an overtime period to score three field goals in quick succession. A fourth was made by Willie Kowallis, but it was only another basket, the game already being on ice.

The regulation time ended with the score tied at 20, after Kowallis had made a free throw in the last minute. It was a brilliant exhibition by both teams, with the score shifting constantly. While Notre Dame took an early lead and had five points before the Panthers started, this quickly was cut down, and the tally tied at the end of seven minutes.

LEAD SHIFTS OFTEN

The lead alternated seven times throughout the tilt, and, except for the first five minutes, the teams never were separated by more than three points. Dr. H. C. Carlson, Pitt mentor, gave Coach George Keogan a test of Hoosier stalling tactics near the end of the first half, when the Panthers held the ball for more than three minutes as the Irish refused to break their guard formation.

While Arture gained the lion's share of the honors with his overtime performance, the guarding of Albright, lengthy center, and his control of the center tip gave Pitt an edge which the Irish were hard pressed to equal. An injury to his ankle took Eddie Baker out of the game in the first five minutes and Arture replaced him to tie for scoring honors with De Cook, Irish center. Each had 10 points, but Arture led in field goals.

"STALL" IS BOOED

Although the stall is familiar to Indiana fans, this was the first time it had been used this year on the Irish floor, and the crowd did not like it. Boos and catcalls greeted the Pitt team as it continued to stand idle, and even at the start of the second half the fans had not returned to a more normal view of basketball as it was being played.

The supremacy of Pittsburgh easily was demonstrated in the over-time period, when Notre Dame hardly controlled the ball for an instant. The Irish made three attempts to score and all of them missed. Pitt made four out of five tries, and it was this edge that won the game. The lineup:

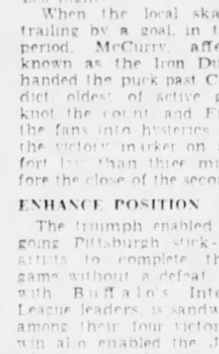
Notre Dame		Pittsburgh
Newman	LF	Cohan
Crowe	RF	Baker
De Cook	C	Albright
Burns	LG	Smith
Baldwin	RG	Kowallis

Field goals: Newman, Arture 3, Albright, Smith, Kowallis 3, Newman 2, De Cook, Baldwin 4. Fouls: Pitt 4, out of 11; Notre Dame, 8 out of 13. Referee—Lambert, Purdue. Umpire—Ross, Penn.

Ruth Picks All-Star Nine; Names Wagner

By ALAN GOULD.

NEW YORK, Jan. 24.—(AP.)—We were sitting around the teacups in the locker room after 18 flustery holes of golf in freezing weather over the course of the North Hempstead Country Club, on Long Island, when Babe Ruth was asked to pick an all-star baseball array, just to warm up the argument.



Honus Wagner.

Basing his selections on his own personal observations over the last 15 or 20 years, he named the following:

Little or no dispute arose as the Babe clicked off the names of his infield. Quite a few might prefer the great Eddie Collins at the Keystone sack or Bill Terry at first, but the consensus of Ruth's hearers was that it would be extremely difficult, if not impossible, to put together a better infield quartet, so far as modern times are concerned.

OUTFIELD HERETICAL

The outfield, however, came close to being heretical as the Babe showed a strong inclination to leave off Ty Cobb as well as Tris Speaker.

Unfortunate though his exit was from the game, Shoeless Joe Jackson unquestionably ranked with the great outfielders of all time, in Ruth's opinion. He had no superior as a natural hitter, the Babe holds.

Charley Wood Set For Big Mound Year

By CHARLES J. DOYLE.

A gangling kid left-hander with a low curve but a high ambition is all set to make a serious bid for lasting diamond fame after giving National League fans a rare sample of his goods.

The hero of this narrative is Charles A. (Spades) Wood, Pirate rookie, who, aside from his personal aspirations, is eager to put the obscure town of Pacolet, S. C., on the Rand-McNallys.

Charley is one of those grand slam youths who like to take out the interference via the strikeout route. He was tossed out of a straight-laced southern college when found holding 13 spades in a bridge game, and he was not in baseball long before he was trying to fan 27 batters. That, of course, is supposed to be par on any course.

Wood actually whiffed 24 hitters in one of his early games and we find that in 197 innings of plum and fancy pitching for Wichita last season he sent expertly 197 soldiers back to the dugouts with their bats on their shoulders after hearing the third strike call.

When Spades reached the majors, however, he quickly learned that the big-time hitters would not swing at balls at missed the plate by a foot or so. In the tall and uncut stretches many a lad will go after the bad flings and of course, this is very good for the strikeout business.

MUCH IN HIS FAVOR

To say it another way, Charley will not fan nine batters per game in the big leagues, yet all who have seen the lad are convinced he will win a majority of his encasements right from the runoff. They further predict he will force his frail self right into the middle of Juley Ens' staff of sharpshooters.

Wood's greatest slab gift apparently is the curve which is so

Titans Top Thiel, 24-23

GREENVILLE, Pa., Jan. 24.—The Westminster College Titans kept their slate clean tonight by nosing out a 24-23 victory over the Thiel College passers in the local gym.

Brownlee's foul shot in the last minute with the score 23-all, turned the trick. And it was a foul called on John Bell, Thiel guard who had made four out of six shots from the center of the floor and whose guarding had kept Thiel in the running, that gave him the opportunity.

There was not a minute's dullness in the battle. For nearly half the game less than three points separated the teams. The score was tied four times in the last half. Except for the first score of the game, a foul for the Titans, Thiel led the entire first half. The lineup:

Westminster (24)		Thiel—23
Boucher	F	Harter
Douglass	F	Wardle
Brownlee	C	Frampton
Hall	G	McCoy
Fisher	G	Bell

Score by halves:

Westminster	11	13—24
Thiel	10	13—23

Substitutions: Myers-Minster for Douglass, Westminster, Hoehera for Douglass, Brownlee for Boucher, Boucher for Brownlee, Frampton for McCoy, McCoy for Frampton. Field goals: Boucher 3, Douglass, Brownlee 2, Frampton, McCoy 2, Bell 2, Wardle 2, Harter 2, Minster. Fouls: Westminster, 8 out of 10; Thiel, 8 out of 10. Referee—Fitting.

Lott Defeats Van Ryn to Keep Canadian Title

CHICAGO STAR TOPS EASTERN RIVAL IN DUEL

New Jerseyite Succumbs to Superior Service in Five Sets, 6-2, 5-7, 7-5, 1-6, 6-3

Victory Is Fourth in Five Years for Windy City Davis Cup Player.

MONTREAL, Que., Jan. 24.—(AP)—For the fourth time in five years George Lott, young Davis Cup ace, won the Canadian indoor tennis singles championship today.

The Chicagoan outstroked another young Davis Cup player, John Van Ryn of New Jersey, in a spectacular five-set match 6-2, 5-7, 7-5, 1-6, 6-3.

George Lott

Lott won the title in 1927 and 1928, lost it in 1929 to J. Gilbert Hall of South Orange, N. J., in 1929, and regained it last year.

Lott's triumph today was gained only after a grueling match in which every point had to be fought for. The Chicagoan captured the first and third sets to lead two sets to one at the interval, then lost the fourth set and then made full use of his tremendous service to win the fifth and deciding one.

The decisive moment in the long-drawn-out battle came in the third game of the fifth set. With games at one-all Lott broke through Van Ryn's service to gain a lead he never thereafter relinquished.

Lott and Van Ryn later teamed up and won the doubles championship, conquering J. Gilbert Hall of South Orange, N. J., and E. W. Leslie of Montreal, in straight sets.

The American Davis Cup pair won the first set after a titanic struggle, 18-16, and then swept through Hall and his Canadian partner for the next two sets in easy fashion, 6-3, 6-1.

BRUINS PAD LEAGUE LEAD

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 24.—(AP)—The Boston Bruins increased their lead in the American group over the Chicago Black Hawks to three points as a result of defeating the Philadelphia Quakers here tonight 4 to 2 in a National League hockey game. The Bruins counted once in the first and third periods while two goals were recorded in the middle session. Shore tallied twice on spectacular dashes.

LEAFS TOP SENATORS

TORONTO, Ont., Jan. 24.—(AP)—The Toronto Maple Leafs strengthened their hold on second place in the Canadian division of the National Hockey League tonight by whipping the last place Ottawa Senators 5-2. Ottawa held the Leafs all-even in the first period, but the home team took a one-goal lead in the second period and never relinquished it. Charley Conacher scored two goals for the winners.

CANADIENS WIN, 6-1

MONTREAL, Que., Jan. 24.—(AP)—The Montreal Canadiens, leaders in the Canadian division of the National Hockey League, buried the New York Americans under a 6-1 score here tonight.

So dazzling was the Canadiens' attack that the Americans never did find themselves until well on in the third period when they were trailing 3-0.

EXPLANATIONS OF RIPLEY'S CARTOONS OF LAST SUNDAY: YERMAK CONQUERED SIBERIA WITH 500 MEN—Yermak Timowief, Cossack leader, outlaw and high seas pirate, accomplished the colossal task of conquering Siberia at the head of a band of 500 desperadoes in a single year (1579-80) and with the loss of only 100 men. This conquest of an immense territory by a handful of adventurers, under untold hardships and against "numberless foes," constitutes one of the most daring campaigns in history. By offering the conquered territory to Czar Ivan the Terrible, he obtained the emperor's pardon for his criminal past. Russia's sovereignty over Siberia dates from this act by Yermak. While fording a river in 1584, Yermak drowned, weighted down by a magnificent suit of armor, which was a present of the Czar. THE HIGHEST RAILROAD IN THE WORLD—The Central Railroad of Peru, extending from Callao, on the Pacific Coast, to Huancayo and the Peruvian copper mining district, has the distinction of being the highest railroad in the world, ascending to an altitude of 15,806 feet over the Continental Divide of the Andes Range. Building of this railroad was a marvelous engineering feat and required 25 years, from 1868 to 1892. The difficulty of constructing a road through this mountainous and rugged country is illustrated by the fact that 416 kilometers (about 275 miles) of track was necessary to cover an airline distance of about 125 miles. One 150-mile portion of the right-of-way has 61 bridges, 67 tunnels and 21 switchbacks, these switchbacks being necessary where curving the track was impossible.

107th Trio Scores Win

The Pittsburgh Polo League season had an auspicious opening at the Hunt Armory last night when the 107th Field Artillery team scored a hairline victory over the mallet-wielders of the 308th Cavalry, 10 ... to 10. One of the biggest and most enthusiastic throngs in the history of Pittsburgh polo saw the exciting match of the ... riders.

A nifty shot by Lieut. Tommy Ward of the big gunners robbed the cavalry ... after the brilliant performance of Lieut. Paul Maglan had put the horsemen out in front. Lieut. Maglan scored five goals in the last two chukkers, his three points made in the last chapter being a big feature of the hot battle. Maglan had a remarkable evening, he making no less than eight goals through the posts. Some of his shots were highly spectacular. Lieut. Ward, of the winning team, was close behind him, with six counters.

Lieut. Meredith Watson experienced the novel sensation of shooting a goal that counted for the enemy. The Field Artillery rider was trying to drive the ball away from his own posts when he accidentally drove it back through the goal.

The game was rough but clean, not a foul being called through the six chukkers. The referee of the battle, Col. Eben Swift Jr., was an Army player of distinction. His officiating last night was of a high order. The lineup and summary:

Ruth Picks Star Team

ture, although, of course, he belongs there by any system of computation, Ruth delegated right field to his old teammate, Harry Hooper, and then went into a huddle with himself over the center field selection.

"We've got to give it to Ty because of his offensive ability," finally decided the Babe. "He was in a class by himself everywhere but on the defense. I would rate Hap Felsch of the old White Sox and Tris Speaker far superior to Cobb on the defense. Felsch was a greater ball hawk than Speaker, and what an arm he had."

GROVE A THROWER

The selection of Mathewson for one of his moundsmen placed Ruth in complete accord with those two great master minds, John McGraw and Connie Mack, both of whom consider Matty the finest all-around pitcher of all time. Mathewson was at the end of his pitching career when Ruth broke in, but the Babe saw enough to convince him of the greatness of "Big Six."

Ruth himself a skillful southpaw before he turned to the outfield, picked Plank and Pennock to round out the pitching nominations.

"They were two of the smartest pitchers I ever saw," said the Babe. "Both had a lot of stuff and great control. For a tight game and reliability in a pinch, I'll take Herb Pennock."

Erie Winner In Pitt Play

With Forsberg, center of the Erie team, shooting like a Charley Hyatt, the Erie entry won the University of Pittsburgh Junior College two-day tournament, trouncing the Uniontown Junior College five, 39 to 16, last night in the Stadium pavilion.

Forsberg scored from the floor nine times and made five out of six fouls, bringing his night's labor to a grand total of 23 points. To make the feat more difficult, Forsberg played the entire game with a broken finger.

The Uniontown team drew a bye on Friday night, while the Erie quintet was scoring a hard-fought win over the Johnstown Junior team, 29 to 27. The lineup:

Yellow Jackets Top Windsor Six, 2-1

McCurry and Fraser Star in Hockey Victory At Garden

pass, and the local guardian had no chance to save.

The rival front lines matched rush with rush during the remainder of the first period, but the visitors elected to nurse their lead and play a defensive game as the second stanza got under way.

It was not until McCurry tallied to knot the count that they "opened up" again. The Duke contributed his goal just five seconds before mid-period, and a neat pass by Eddie Ouellette paved the way for the score. Duke received the assist as he swept past the last blue line, and he backhanded the disc high into an upper corner of the cage as he swept in on Benedict. Fraser's goal, one that climaxed a brilliant individual effort, was registered when Windsor had two and Pittsburgh one man in the penalty box. Poke-checking the puck away from a rival attacker, he rushed down center ice, split the waiting defense men and beat Benedict with a shot so hot that the goalie never even saw the disc. Fraser packs one of the hardest shots of any man playing hockey in any league today.

FINISH ON DEFENSIVE

For the first time this season here, a visiting team supplied most of the wild action in the third and final period. The Jackets started the final frame by matching attack with attack, but about mid-period penalties to Gregg and Ouellette forced them back on the defensive, and they remained on guard in their own territory throughout the remainder of the flight.

Albie Cox strengthened his claim to recognition as the league's best goalie by pulling one spectacular save after another as the battle wore on to a torrid close. Bellemer, Robinson, Lever, Brown and Huggins suffered most from his larceny tactics, and the fans rewarded his daring efforts with round after round of applause.

Benedict, Windsor goalie, was injured just one minute before the final gong when he crashed into Ouellette in making a falling save. The local center's skate cut a gash in Benedict's head, but he was able to resume play after receiving first aid. The lineup:

Pittsburgh		Windsor
Cox	G	Benedict
Fraser	D	Arbour
Betel	D	Bellemer
Ouellette	C	Haynes
Proudfoot	W	Lever
Gregg	W	Robinson

First period summary: Scoring, Lever (from Robinson), 19:10. Penalties, Haynes 2, Betel, Fraser.

Second period summary: Scoring, McCurry (from Ouellette), 9:45; Fraser (unassisted), 17:07. Penalties, Bellemer 2, Ouellette, Bowne, McCurry.

Third period summary: Scoring, none. Penalties, Ouellette, Gregg, Arbour.

Spares: Pittsburgh, McGuire, Field, McCurry, Bowden, Halliday, White, Bowne, McIntyre. Windsor, Lever, Huggins, Dugan, Bowne, Brown.

Referee—Bill Smith, of Hamilton.

INDIANS LUCKY TO WIN

CLEVELAND, Jan. 24.—(AP)—Cleveland kept its hold on fourth place in the International Hockey League standing tonight by virtue of a lucky goal in the final period of an otherwise scoreless game. It gave Cleveland a season record of 12 victories against 11 losses. Also it sank Detroit farther into sixth place.

Emmett Venne, husky Detroit goalkeeper, was an immovable barrier in the face of a hard-driving Indian attack until five minutes and 35 seconds of the final period had skidded by. Then the Indian forward line carried the puck down, King Williams at left wing, Archie Briden at center, and Cliff McBride on the right. Briden passed to Williams at the far left corner barrier, then camped in front of the goal. Williams, almost in line with the goal post, shot the puck out, apparently for Briden to billiard it in. The disc appeared to hit Venne's skate or stick and bounced backward into the net for the all-important goal. Williams got credit for the goal and Briden was given an assist. The lineup:

Cleveland		Detroit
Baxter	G	Venne
Young	RD	Spring
McFarlane	LD	Hollinger
Gray	C	Herberts
Dorais	RW	Goldsworthy
Clark	LW	H. Brophy

Spares: Cleveland, Foss, Briden, Williams, McBride, Bruce; Detroit, Murray, McIntosh, Fraser, Gore, Newman. Referee—Mike Rodden. Scoring, first period, none. Penalties, none. Second period, none. Third period, 1, Cleveland, Williams (Briden), 5:35. Penalty, Murray.

BISONS DOWN STARS

FORT ERIE, Can., Jan. 24.—Buffalo defeated Syracuse here tonight, 4 to 2, in a hard-fought game in the International Hockey League. The play at times bordered close to undue roughness, while the checking always was close and hard. Penalties proved costly to the Stars, two of the Bisons' goals in the first period coming in quick succession with Holmes resting in the penalty box for boarding Bogardis. The chunky center of the visiting team no sooner had landed in the penalty box than he was attacked by a spectator. The police ejected the spectator and Holmes was not injured in the melee. The lineup:

Buffalo		Syracuse
Taugher	G	Farrell
Lederman	D	Hughes
Murray	D	Paddon
Voss	C	Holmes
Cahill	R.W.	Markle
Gross	L.W.	Klein

Spares: Buffalo, Cain, Jackson, Roth, Martin, Bogardis, Johnson, Gauthier, Lauder. Syracuse, Heard, Brown, Fournier, Palangio, Teasdale, McKnight.

Referee—Tom Munro.

Scoring summary, first period: 1, Syracuse, Klein (Holmes), 2:40; 2, Buffalo, Bogardis (Jackson), 11:50; 3, Buffalo, Martin (Bogardis), 35 seconds. Penalties, Hughes, Holmes, Teasdale.

Second period: 4, Buffalo, Gauthier (Martin), 14:10; 5, Syracuse, Klein (Hughes), 1:35. Penalties, Fournier, Gauthier.

Third period: 6, Buffalo, Lauder (Lederman), 1:45. Penalties, Cahill, Fournier (major), Voss, Martin.

elusive that many batters are nonplussed even when they know it is being served. That is saving a lot for any "hook." The lefthander's curve may equal the one flipped by Johnny Morrison. But Charley's pitching skill takes in other elements. In the second place, his fast ball is much better than one would imagine after glancing at his physique.

The youngster returned home last fall with the idea of gaining considerable poundage. In the event he reports to Manager Ens with added muscle, his chances of being a regular next season will be greatly increased. It also is of considerable significance to state that Wood is possessed of "pitching sense" and appears to be loaded with determination. Add these qualities to good behavior and you have quite a prospect.

ANOTHER FRANK MERRIWELL

The story of Charles' boyhood matches some of the masterpieces from the pen of Alger or Standish. And the tale would have to be unfolded by one of those gifted writers to do it justice. There are less than 1,000 souls in the town that gave Spades to baseball, but small towns are conducive to star ball players; perhaps because there is so much space for preparation.

In his high school and semi-pro days, Lefty was so good that on one occasion he intentionally spurned a no-hit contest in order to pick up another strikeout that would make his card total 24 for the day. It seems he had felt the thrill of a no-hit masterpiece on several occasions, and, in the strikeout instance, was after that particular sort of glory.

Charley was engaged in an independent game when he hung up the 24 strikeouts. On that day he reached the two-out-in-the-ninth stage with nary a hit being recorded. The succeeding batter hit a slow tap on the ground which Wood could have fielded, but, scorning the no-hit feat, he allowed the ball to roll for a single in order to give himself a chance to get another swinging victim. And he accomplished the stunt.

Charley's feats in high school were of such a pronounced nature that it was little wonder he was sought by some of the semi-pro directors. We see him at the age of 17 thrilled by the offer to pitch for money as well as glory, and his entry into the pro ranks was marked by a no-run, no-hit performance.

MOTHER HAD TO BE WON

The boy says he had to plead with his mother before she would allow him to pitch for the Pinewood (S. C.) club, which was slated to mix with the Southern Railway team, of Columbia, S. C. Eventually he received his mother's permission and set out for Columbia, heralded as a "ringer."

Imagine the surprise of the Pinewood manager when he had his first glimpse of his "ringer." The imported star made no hit whatever as he stalked up to the boss carrying only 128 pounds of athletic prowess. And his youthful appearance added to the disappointment of the pilot, who had dickered for Wood solely on account of his astounding record. A few hours later, the same gent was ready to kiss the lad.

The bridge incident at college marked another important milestone in the life of Charles. The youngster was only a sophomore at the time of his departure from the institution, but he had shown enough in the earlier days to win the attention of big baseball men.

GREENBACKS CHARMED HIM

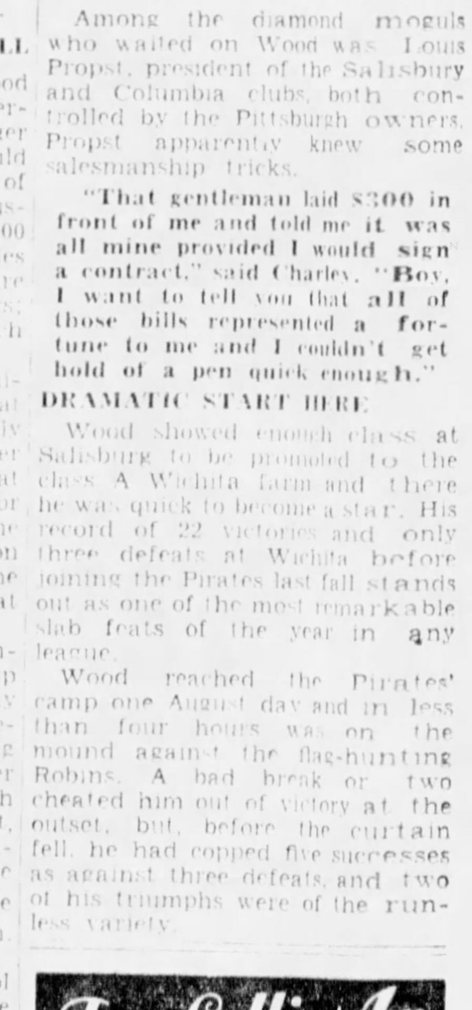
Among the diamond moguls who waited on Wood was Louis Propst, president of the Salisbury and Columbia clubs, both controlled by the Pittsburgh owners. Propst apparently knew some salesmanship tricks.

"That gentleman laid $300 in front of me and told me it was all mine provided I would sign a contract," said Charley. "Boy, I want to tell you that all of those bills represented a fortune to me and I couldn't get hold of a pen quick enough."

DRAMATIC START HERE

Wood showed enough class at Salisburg to be promoted to the class A Wichita farm and there he was quick to become a star. His record of 22 victories and only three defeats at Wichita before joining the Pirates last fall stands out as one of the most remarkable slab feats of the year in any league.

Wood reached the Pirates' camp one August day and in less than four hours was on the mound against the flag-hunting Robins. A bad break or two cheated him out of victory at the outset, but, before the curtain fell, he had copped five successes as against three defeats, and two of his triumphs were of the runless variety.



Five Clubs Battle for County League Laurels

FELDERS ONLY WEAK LINK IN FLOOR CIRCUIT

Mieles and Ellwood City Stage Strong Comeback In Second Half of Race.

Ray Schneiders Likely to Face Sterner Opposition in West Penn Loop Chase.

By JULIUS LEVIN.

Every club in the league having tasted defeat, followers of the Allegheny County circuit are witnessing one of the greatest races in the history of that popular circuit. No less than five of the six members in the loop are striving for the second-round championship and the right to meet Fintex, first-half winner, in the playoffs at the close of the season.

The lone member of the Allegheny County League which has failed to figure in any victories so far is the Jeannette entry, admitted after the Glassport franchise was withdrawn. The Felders, although a successful club as an independent quintet, have been unable to strike a winning pace in the County circuit and are doomed to finish in the cellar unless they take a decided brace.

MIELES BIG FEATURE

One of the features of the second-round race has been the strong comeback staged by the Ellwood City Manhattans and the J. J. Mieles, two clubs that are playing as good ball as any club in the league. The Mieles, admitted to be one of the smartest floor machines in the County League, are living up to their reputation by knocking off the leaders in a consistent manner. This was the club that checked the winning streaks of the Ellwood City Manhattans and Fintex.

The Duquesne Lafayettes, four times winners of the league championship, still have hopes of winning a place in the playoffs by taking the second-half championship. Their only defeat in the second round came at the hands of the Manhattan. Fintex and Charleroi, likewise, are staging a determined fight for the crown. If Fintex wins the laurels a playoff series will not be necessary, as this team led the way in the first-half race.

All the clubs have bolstered their lineups for the drive down the homestretch, and unless something unforeseen happens the race should be a fight to the finish. Aside from the Felders, there isn't a set-up opponent in the second half, judging from the results of games played so far.

BIG GAMES CARDED

Every game scheduled this week finds a contender for the title in action. Tomorrow finds the Lafayettes at Jeannette; Tuesday the Mieles play at Duquesne, while the Jeannette Felders meet Fintex at Columbus Temple; Wednesday Fintex goes to Ellwood City; Thursday Charleroi is at Columbus Temple to meet the Mieles, while Saturday finds Ellwood City at Charleroi.

The Ray E. Schneiders, winners of the first-half championship in the West Penn League, likely will find the competition stronger in the second round. The Penn Five, of Sharpsburg, champion of last year, has hopes of taking the second-round fight, while North Side Community House, a powerful team in the closing days of the first-half race, should be a contender from the start.

Even the so-called weak members of the West Penn League have shown unusual strength of late and followers of the league would not be surprised to see many upsets before the championship is decided. The Knickers, South Side Falcons and W. U. Hoyles likely will have considerable to say what club is going to win the title.

Channing Winner Of Dog Derby

LAKE PLACID, N. Y., Jan. 24.—(AP.)—Walter Channing, of Boston, with dogs bred in his own kennels, won the fourth annual Lake Placid Club sled dog derby here today.

Channing's huskies, which led the field yesterday, again romped in to capture the second day's honors. In the two racing days the team covered 32 miles of difficult course in 2 hours, 58 minutes and 25 seconds.

Mrs. E. P. Ricker, of Poland Spring, Me., driving herself, took second place, finishing approximately 14 minutes behind Channing.

Hargrave Signs With Minneapolis

MINNEAPOLIS, Jan. 24.—(AP.)—Eugene (Bubbles) Hargrave, veteran catcher, formerly with Cincinnati of the National League and New York of the American League, today signed a contract for this year with the Minneapolis club, of the American Association. Hargrave was made a free agent by the Yankees last year.

SAATRE SKI CHAMP

SALISBURY, Conn., Jan. 24.—(AP.)—Magnus Saatre, of Salisbury, national cross-country champion for the past three years and winner of the Beck trophy at Lake Placid, won the fifth annual Connecticut champion ski race today. Less than two minutes behind him came Ole Hegge, of Salisbury, who, in 1926, 1927 and 1928 was champion of all Europe and is still undefeated national champion of Norway. Third place was won by Birger Torrison, of the Norway Ski Club, of New York City.

CRICKETERS CLASH

EAST LONDON, South Africa, Jan. 24—(AP.)—The touring English cricket team began a three-day match here against Cape Province today. The latter batted first and scored 156, of which Viljoen made 86. Goddard, the English bowler, took three wickets for 29 runs. England had made 162 for two Wickets when Stumps were pulled. Wally Hammond contributed 87, not out.

SCOTLAND VICTOR

EDINBURGH, Jan. 24.—(AP.)—Scotland defeated France in an International rugby match here today by six points to four. Scotland led by six points to nothing at half time.

Late C. L. Saxton Trotting Patron

C. L. Saxton, prominent local real estate man, who died early yesterday, was a leader in sponsoring harness horse racing in the Pittsburgh district for many years. He became a member of the Schenley Matinee Club in 1914 and was one of its most enthusiastic members, serving as president for six years. He retired from active harness racing shortly before his death.

Saxton purchased and raced many harness stars, his most prominent entry being Lucille Frisco, the trotting filly, with which he won many stakes.

DUKES TO NAME LAYDEN 'CZAR'

Elmer Layden, football coach and athletic director of Duquesne University, is slated to become the Knute Rockne of the local Catholic institution.

Layden, who has accomplished wonders in a football way on the Bluff since taking over the reigns there several years ago, is to be named chairman of the athletic committee at the next meeting. At present he is merely a member of the board.

The new berth will give the former member of Notre Dame's famous Four Horsemen backfield wide administrative powers.

Shots and Passes

The P. A. A. passers go after their fourteenth straight victory Tuesday night when they meet the Beaver Copenhagens on the P. A. A. court. Thursday they meet Greensburg Y. on the same floor, while Saturday finds them in Cleveland to meet West Side Y. M. C. A.

The Goldenson Vanities will invade Altoona next Friday to meet the Siegal Girls of that city in a benefit basketball game. The appearance of the Vanities in Altoona has stirred up considerable interest in that city and according to reports every ticket has been sold for the game.

Hudson Rankin, former Uniontown High School star, is one of the mainsprings in the attack of the H. C. Rodgers Five of Slippery Rock, a team that has been defeating some of the best clubs in the district. Uniontown also is the home of Charley Hyatt and the two Cohen boys, all of Pitt fame.

Followers of the Allegheny County League are singing the praises of Tommy O'Hara, star forward of the Mieles, whose work all season stamps him as one of the best performers in the league.

O'Hara's work has been one of the features of the Mieles' good showing.

The Irene Kaufmann Settlement House will meet the Butler Paulists on the I. K. S. floor next Friday night. Ziggy Kahn's boys will be out to turn the tables on the Butlerites for a defeat suffered earlier in the season.

Puss Ferraro, captain and star of the Penn Five of Sharpsburg, was all set to finish the season with the J. J. Mieles when he changed his plans and decided to stay with the Sharpsburgers. The Mieles had Ferraro registered for the second half of the season.

Although Fintex, winner of the first-half Allegheny County League championship, has Marshall (Sleepy) Glenn, former football and basketball star at West Virginia University, enrolled as one of its eligible players, the former Mountaineer flash is not expected to play for the first half champs. The big hitch in the negotiations is the fact that it requires six hours to make the trip to Pittsburgh from Morgantown.

The showing of Faith Chapel in the Pittsburgh Senior Church League this season stamps Lou Pomrenke's club as one of the best teams of its class in the district. Besides sweeping through the first half schedule with points to spare, Faith Chapel defeated some of the leading independent clubs. The church champs won their first 10 games.

The Braddock No-Names, under the management of Leonard Lipman, are eager to arrange games at home and abroad with light first-class teams. Write the manager at 646 Corey avenue, Braddock, Pa., or call Brandywine 2924.

C. DeWitt Hyatt, coach of the P. A. A. passers, has declined an invitation to enter his team in the annual A. A. U. tournament, due to the heavy schedule of games Manager Nicholson has arranged for the Winged Headers. The P. A. A. quintet would have to cancel many high-class attractions to compete in the tournament.

Bill Saller, Tiny Duvall, Russ McCaig, Bill Lohr and Frankie Yaderosa are a few of the former scolastic basketball stars who are wearing the colors of the Pitcairn P. R. R. quintet this season. This team plays all home games at Pitcairn High School.

Wesley Pfeiffer, former Homestead and Duquesne Lafayette star, has been signed by the J. J. Mieles. Fintex has released Boots Klinzing.

The Puget Sound Navigation Company girls of Seattle, Wash., plan to invade Pittsburgh during the week of March 24 and have asked the Goldenson Vanities for a game here. Meyer Goldenson, sponsor of the South Side team, which boasts a string of 32 straight games, is willing to play the contest for charity.

The proposed charity game between the Goldenson Vanities and the former Y. W. H. A. girls has been called off by mutual agreement. The teams could not agree on terms.

The Jeannette Felders, of the Allegheny County League, will be the attraction of the Y. M. H. A. next Thursday night. The Felders, who have failed to win a game since their entrance in the Allegheny County League, boast a one-point victory over the Bellefielders.

The Mieles, staging a brilliant comeback after taking two on the chin in the second round of the County League, will go after their third straight victory Tuesday night when they invade Duquesne to meet the Lafayettes. The Jeannette Felders will be the attraction of Fintex at Columbus Temple the same night.—JULIUS LEVIN.

SCHOENI TO LEAD CREW

ANNAPOLIS, Md., Jan. 24.—(AP.)—Walter Paul Schoeni, Portland, Ore., has been elected captain of this year's Naval Academy crew, it was announced today. Schoeni has been in the varsity boat for three years and now is drilling indoors with other candidates.

SEWELL SIGNED BY YANKEES

NEW YORK, Jan. 24.—(AP.)—The New York Yankees have signed Joe Sewell, veteran Cleveland infielder, who was given his unconditional release a few days ago. The Yankee management announced today.

Sewell became a free agent on his release by Cleveland under the major league 10-year rule and made his own deal with the Yankees. The terms of the contract which he signed were not announced.

NETMEN ELECT BURNS

CHICAGO, Jan. 24.—(AP.)—Fred D. Burns, of Cincinnati, today was elected president of the Western Lawn Tennis Association. His election marked the first time in the association's existence that a Chicagoan was not selected for the post.

BIGGER AND BETTER

THE NEW CHEVROLET SIX

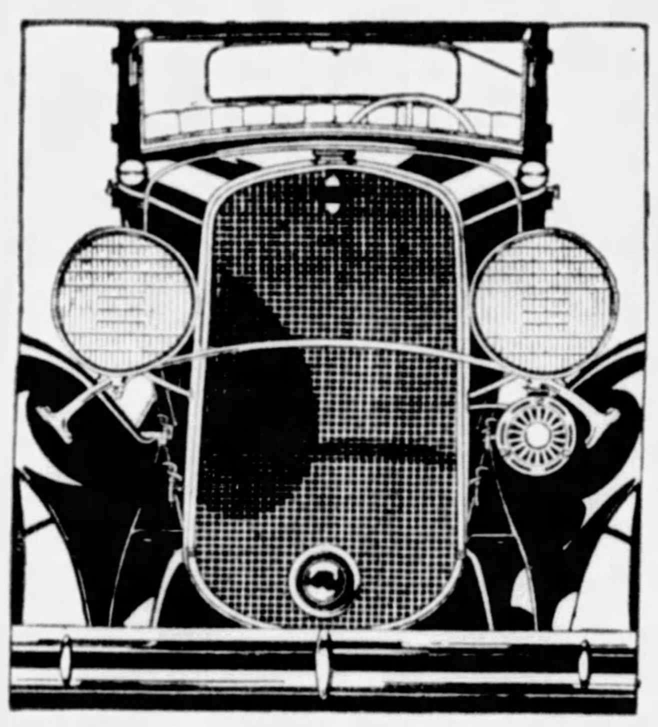
Strikingly beautiful, fleet and smart —a masterpiece of Fisher styling

CHEVROLET

In the entire field of modern coachcraft no symbol has come to mean more to the buyer of a motor car than Body by Fisher. And never has Fisher's superiority been more strikingly exemplified than in the beautiful new bodies of the Bigger and Better Chevrolet Six!

Working with the added advantage of a lengthened wheelbase, Fisher artists and designers have been able to achieve in the new Chevrolet a degree of smartness, comfort and impressiveness hitherto considered exclusive to cars far higher in price.

Inside and out, you will discover scores of refinements that stamp this car as a masterpiece of modern coachwork. Radiator, headlamps and tie-bar have been artistically grouped to create an unusually attractive and distinctive ensemble. Mouldings sweep back from the graceful new radiator in an unbroken line to blend with the smart new body contours. And new colors, in carefully devised combinations, lend a new individuality. Interiors, too, are exceptional in every way. The new mohair and broadcloth upholstery is tailored with exceptional smartness. Seats are wider and deeper and more luxuriously cushioned. A deeper windshield and wider windows give better vision for both driver and passengers. And beautiful new hardware, of modern design, lends a final note of charm.



Front view of the new Chevrolet Sport Coupe

The greater quality and beauty of the new Chevrolet-Fisher bodies have a counterpart in the many improvements which have been provided in the chassis of this Bigger and Better Six. Among these improvements are a stronger frame; easier steering; a more durable clutch; a quieter, smoother transmission; and engine refinements which make the new Chevrolet a car you will be happy to drive—as well as proud to own.

The Bigger and Better Chevrolet Six is now on display in our showrooms. See it today—drive it—and learn for yourself that it is the Great American Value!

Many Champions Appear Doomed to Fall This Year

JAMES J. LONG Sport Comment

Crowns Are in Danger. Almost Sweep in Ring. Tennis Throne Shaky. — Shift Due in Baseball. Training Season Near. Defense in Hockey.

MORE TITLES MAY PASS THAN IN 1930

DISASTROUS AS 1930 proved to sport champions, 1931 threatens to be even tougher. The year not long gone was perhaps a record breaker for the number of title changes it brought, but the one now nearing the end of its first month is likely to set the figures even higher.

A glance around the championship circle suggests the possibility that a large number of the thrones will have different occupants when another New Year's Day comes along. Fully half of the present titleholders may go down in the meantime. [illegible] losing lot.

THE BOXING GAME [illegible] biggest upheaval it has ever known. [illegible] that the great majority of the [illegible] positions of distinction [illegible].

Last year saw the unusual number of seven titular shifts in the fistic realm but an even higher total is in prospect for 1931. Indeed it is not improbable that the entire array of rulers will be wiped out with the exception of Jack (Kid) Berg, junior welterweight.

WITH THE FLYWEIGHT title claimed by both Midget Wolgast and Frankie Genaro, one of them is certain to be forced out. Al Brown does not look nearly so secure at the head of the bantams as he did a year ago, and Battling Battalino is unlikely to escape the loss of the feather-weight scepter if he encounters Fidel La Barba.

Benny Bass, Tony Canzoneri and Tommy Freeman look hardly good enough to last through the year as the junior lightweight, lightweight and welterweight kings. Mickey Walker probably will outgrow the middleweight division. Maxie Rosenbloom will eventually beat himself as light heavyweight leader, and either Jack Sharkey or Young Stribling shapes up as almost a sure bet to defeat Max Schmeling.

THE RETIREMENT OF Bobby Jones means a new title holders in each of the four divisions of major golfdom and the chances are against the retention of the United States professional laurels by Tommy Armour. Johnny Doeg won the United States tennis championship last year by too slight a margin to make it seem likely that he will be able to withstand the assaults of Frank Shields, Sidney Wood and Cliff Sutter. Bill Tilden's professional shift leaves the Wimbledon championship open, and keeping the women's United States tennis title looks like too big a job for Betty Nuthall with Helen Wills Moody returning to competition.

THE ATHLETICS MAY be able to make it three American League pennants in a row through having two pitchers like George Earnshaw and Lefty Grove, but tradition says the American League representatives are due for a tumble in the world series, as neither league has ever won it five times in succession.

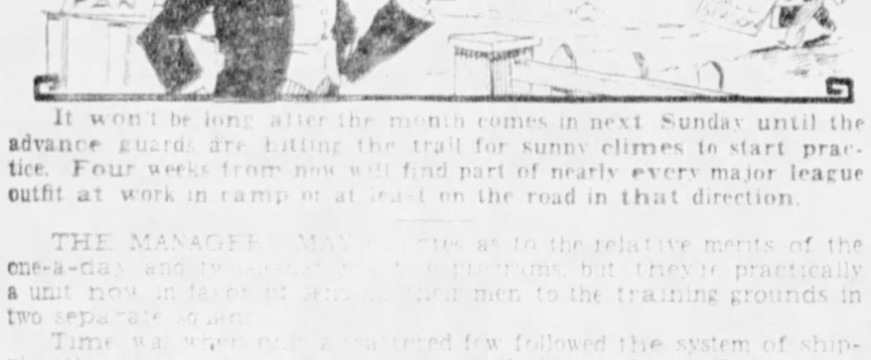
It is unlikely that the Cardinals will repeat for the National League flag against the opposition of the Robins, Pirates, Cubs and Giants. Nor is Hack Wilson a safe bet to stay on the home run throne with Babe Ruth out to qualify for a new contract for 1932, to say nothing of Chuck Klein, Lou Gehrig and some others.

YOU NEVER CAN count Notre Dame as beaten in football until it has actually happened, but even under the great Knute Rockne the Irish have never gone three straight seasons undefeated. The schedule they play makes it almost impossible and besides they're losing 14 men by graduation, including six regulars. Alabama slips, too, in the loss of nine seniors and a coach. In the pro ranks, too, the Green Bay Packers will find a third crown pretty hard to win.

A decision will be reached, no doubt, between Jim Londos and Don George in their rival wrestling championship claims. The balkline billiard titles of Jake Schaefer and Welker Cochran and the pocket laurels of Erwin Rudolph all may change hands when they are next placed at stake.

AND THAT'S THE unpromising outlook that stretches ahead of the sport kings almost all along the line. Here and there looms a title holder who will not be knocked off easily, such as Alfred Banuett in handball, Billy Arnold in automobile racing, Ted Phelps in professional rowing and a few others, but in the main the indications are that more new champions will be crowned than in any previous year.

ALMOST BEFORE YOU can realize it the hands have gone round the sport clock again. Here's another baseball season practically at the gate. February is only a week away and that's the month that sees the big league clubs departing for their training camps.



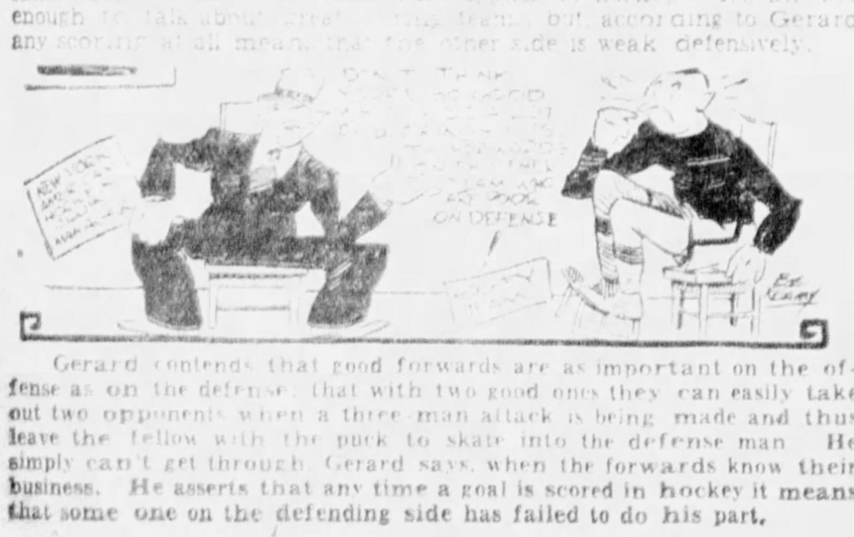
It won't be long after the month comes in next Sunday until the advance guards are hitting the trail for sunny climes to start practice. Four weeks from now will find part of nearly every major league outfit at work in camp or at least on the road in that direction.

THE MANAGERS MAY [illegible] as to the relative merits of the one-a-day and [illegible] programs, but they're practically a unit now in favor of sending their men to the training grounds in two separate squads.

Time was when only a scattered few followed the system of shipping the battery men [illegible] ahead of the regulars. Fred Clarke made the Pirates one of the first to take it up. Now the club that hasn't adopted that plan is an exception.

IT IS NOT surprising that the system has become general, because it has everything to recommend it. When all the players of a club go to camp together, the pitchers for days can do nothing but lob the ball to the plate and hitting that kind of pitching is no real practice at all for the batters. It's just a waste of time. But when the hurlers go first they are able to put something on the ball by the time the other players arrive a week or so later. That assures real batting practice, with the hitters getting a chance to bat against something on the order of the pitching they must face during the pennant season.

WHEN THERE'S AIR-TIGHT pitching in baseball, there just "ain't no hitting," says Eddie Gerard, manager of the New York Americans, declaring the same rule applies to hockey. It's all well enough to talk about [illegible] teams, but according to Gerard, any scoring at all means that the other side is weak defensively.



Gerard contends that good forwards are as important on the offense as on the defense; that with two good ones they can easily take out two opponents when a three-man attack is being made and thus leave the fellow with the puck to skate into the defense man. He simply can't get through, Gerard says, when the forwards know their business. He asserts that any time a goal is scored in hockey it means that some one on the defending side has failed to do his part.

P. A. A. CARRIES ON HYATT TRADITION

Fierro, Bantam Ring Star, in Local Debut

Boxing returns to Motor Square Garden Tuesday night after an absence of 15 days there with one of the highest touted bantamweights in the sport making his local debut in the 10-round main bout. He is Harry Fierro, Chicago Italian, who meets Johnny Datto, Filipino, of Cleveland, a featherweight puncher, who recently defeated Jackie Rodgers, local Negro star, in the same ring, flooring him a number of times in the second round.

Fierro is boxing featherweights because he can't get sufficient competition in his own class to keep him busy. He has mingled with Archie Bell, Vidal Gregorio, Izzy Schwartz, Kid Francis, Earl Mastro, Ernie Peters and others. He contends Al Brown and Bushy Graham, claimants of the bantamweight title, refuse to box him.

BOTH GOOD PUNCHERS

While Datto is a corking puncher with his right hand, as he demonstrated against Rodgers, Fierro himself packs a wallop that must be respected. He has had many of his foes on the floor.

Jimmy Thomas, Hill Negro, gets his first real chance to prove his worth in the eight-round semi-final against Ollie Bartlett, sensational club fighter, of Oklahoma. Jimmy Belmont, of Braddock, and Jimmy McGraw, of Wheeling meet in the second bout and Harry Fine, of the Hill, and Louie Severo, of Meadville, box the opener.

Both Fierro and Datto are due in town this morning and will work out at different hours in the Motor Square gym this afternoon.

Two other professional shows are carded in the Pittsburgh district during the week, Jimmy Kelly, of the North Side, meeting Billy Rose, of Cincinnati, and Mose Butch, of Oakland, clashing with Johnny Warner, of Clairton, in a double windup at the Moose Temple, Friday night, while Frank Novak, North Side heavyweight, boxes Benny Touchstone, of Detroit, in the 10-round main event at McKeesport, Thursday night.

OTHER SHOWS CARDED

Promoter Ray Eberle puts on a local talent show of five six-round bouts headed by Mike Kelly and Nick Gruber, heavyweights, in the Rialto Theater, Aliquippa, tomorrow night. Andy Andrucci, East End lightweight, meets Mickey Duris, of Johnstown, in the main bout of a show at Johnstown tomorrow night with Joey Katkish, of Lawrenceville, boxing Press Johnson, Akron Negro, in the semi-final, while, at Wheeling, W. Va., Phil Zwick, of Cleveland, and Freddie Miller, of Cincinnati, provide the main bout fireworks.

Amateur bouts are scheduled tomorrow night by the Twenty-seventh Ward A. C., in Columbus Hall, North Side, and in the Greensburg Coliseum.

one because of a sprained ankle and the other because of a cold.

Emmett Rocco, Youngstown [illegible], is slated to box Arthur DeKuh at Wichita, Kans., Wednesday night. Tony Herrera, Mexican [illegible] makes his New York debut against Sammy Dorfman in one of the 10-round bouts on an all-star card in Madison Square Garden Friday night.

Two champions appear in bouts tomorrow night. Tommy Freeman, the welterweight ruler, opposing Eddie Murdock at Oklahoma City and Tony Canzoneri, lightweight king, engaging Johnny Farr in New Orleans, his home town. The Freeman match is over the weight while Canzoneri's is a no-decision affair. Tommy Loughran boxes Jack Gross, southpaw heavyweight, at the Arena in Philadelphia.

Eight bouts will make up an amateur boxing card at the Pittsburgh Lyceum Thursday night.

Between Rounds

Members of Greater Pittsburgh Chapter No. [illegible], Disabled American Veterans of the World War, will be guests of the Motor Square Boxing Club at the Datto-Fierro show. Bernard [illegible], adjutant of the chapter, will be in charge of the group.

Phil Goldstein's Y. M. H. A. amateur boxing team is coming along nicely. It turned in seven victories in eight starts and four wins in five battles in the A. M. A. junior tournament at the Keystone Club before it was necessary to default two members in the semi-finals.

Germany In Olympics

MUNICH, Jan. 24.—(AP)—Germany is to send a team to the 1932 Olympics in Los Angeles.

The German Light Aathletics Association, representing all the states of the reich and controlling body for track and field in the republic, so announced today.

Only the male stars will be sent across the Atlantic, the association said, the cost of sending a woman's team being prohibitive unless it should relinquish participation in the women's quadrennial championships, set for 1934, probably in Italy.

The money to send the team to the United States is to be raised by a series of special sports meets and through a cut in the salaries of the association officials. They voted to slash their salaries six per cent to raise money for the Olympic trip.

Because of the financial stringency, only outstanding stars will be picked for the team.

DOUGLAS TIES BRIDGEVILLE, 1-1

Clan Douglas and Bridgeville played to a 1-1 tie in the semi-final round of the West Penn Senior Cup at the Homewood Playgrounds yesterday afternoon.

Approximately 2,000 fans, easily the largest Saturday crowd of the season, packed the spacious stands to watch the worst exhibition of the season. The players could not be blamed, for it was impossible to play in the ankle-deep sea of mud that blanketed the field.

Referee McArdle considered declaring the field unfit for play, but feared sending the large crowd home dissatisfied.

As is generally the case on a field of this kind, fouls (and plenty of them) graced the 90 minutes of play.

Clan Douglas threw away its first chance of entering the West Penn final. The Clansmen scored with only seven minutes of play remaining. A scramble around Frank Darkus found Duff scoring from close in.

Bridgeville protested the goal, claiming offside, but the claim was ignored.

The goal caused a storm and resulted in the banishment of two of the Bridgeville players. But when the ball was centered Cimerolli and Zinger took the ball through the Douglas defense and tied the score. And that is what the game was worth—a replay.

Davy Herron, McDonald and Duff starred for Douglas, while Zinger and Alex Kusis played good soccer for the Keystone Leaguers. The lineup:

Bridgeville—1.		Clan Douglas—1.
Darkus	G	Wakeman
Spart	R. B.	McDonald
Smart	L. B.	Foster
Cimerolli	R. H.	Herron
Jablonski	C. H.	Eagleson
Dalzuffo	L. H.	Stirling
Kusis	O. R.	Potter
Zinger	I. R.	Duff
Godfrey	C.	Moir
Cimerolli	I. L.	Thom
Cimerolli	O. L.	Eagleson

Goals: Duff, Cimerolli. Referee—McArdle. Linesmen—Corns, Simpson.

Sparky Ewalt Stows Away Highly-Touted Homestead Heavy in Semi-Final.

By JESS CARVER.

Two one-round knockouts, three referees' decisions, two judges' verdicts and the toss of a coin decided championships in the eight divisions of the annual junior A. M. A. boxing tournament, which wound up three evenings of mitt-slinging in the Keystone A. C. gymnasium last night.

A packed house thrilled to the earnest endeavor of the simon-pures, who put on a grand and glorious 21-bout finale to what was a highly successful tournament. The Sands A. C., of Uniontown, was awarded the trophy emblematic of the A. M. A. club championship as a result of having scored the most points in the tourney.

Just when the customers were beginning to fear they'd have to go home without witnessing an extra-round bout in the finals, Harry Seig, of the Boniface Lyceum, and Bob Ruppel, of the Ninth Ward Republican Club, ripped and tore into each other for three hectic rounds in the 147-pound class, and, at the conclusion of the regulation trio of rounds, the judges both voted for a draw and Referee Billy Lewis ordered an extra round. Seig put on full steam, and, by superior punching at close quarters, hammered himself out a title.

ZIVICS TOSS FOR TITLE

Eddie and Fritzie Zivic, of the famous Lawrenceville family of boxers, won their respective ways to the final round of the 126-pound class, but were not permitted to fight it out. W. S. Haddock, president of the A. M. A., in charge of the tourney, decided it was against the canons and spirit of the Amateur Athletic Union to permit brothers to raise their hands against each other and flipped a coin. Eddie called the turn, tails, and was awarded the title.

Knockouts featured the final battles in both the 175-pound and 112-pound divisions. In the former, big Nick Maloy, who is constructed along the lines of Primo Carnera, put out the lights for Johnny Gacina, of the Argonne A. C. Maloy's devastating left hand, which jabbed and hooked with amazing power, was too much for Gacina, and the latter, after being socked mightily once or twice, took to bobbing very low to escape the formidable weapon. He went too low, finally, and bumped his head on the canvas, practically knocking himself out. He took the count draped more or less gracefully on the lower rope after about half of the first round was over and collapsed entirely after being dragged to his corner.

Paul Monar, a clever little fellow, as smooth a workman as any boxer appearing in the tourney, dropped rugged Harry Boyle, a Meadville (Pa.) entrant, four times in the first round, and, just as Harry was staggering to his wobbly pins after the fourth knockdown, a towel fluttered into the ring. Boyle objected strenuously, but the act was one of mercy.

EWALT STOPS PHENOM

Rugged Sparky Ewalt, of the Pastorious A. C., a favorite in the heavyweight division from the start of the tourney, was trimmed handily in the final bout by John Yelonsky, of the Sands A. C. Ewalt ended the victory string of George Perrung, who has been more or less of a sensation in the amateur ranks lately, by knocking him out in the second round of a semi-final go. Yelenosky's hard right uppercut and left jab and endurance proved too great a barrier for the husky local boxer in the deciding tussle, and Ewalt retired a much-battered boxer.

Hugo Dontell, Burke A. C. entry, annexed the 135-pound class belt, gaining the referee's verdict over Tony Shurra, an unattached lightweight. In the 118-pound division, Sam Julian, another Sands A. C. hopeful, knew too much and hit too hard and consistently for Frank Tatomer, another unattached scrapper. Julian won the unanimous decision, despite the fact that Phil (Chappy) Goldstein did a right noble job of seconding Tatomer.

BENDER WINS LAURELS

John Bender, of the Bender A. C., was the recipient of the referee's nod in the 160-pound class, although some of the boys thought his rival, Jack Snyder, of the Y. M. H. A., should have had at least a chance to continue for an extra round. It was a right nifty scrap.

H. D. Jacobs and Harry Neaman were the judges and Bill Simendinger, Billy Lewis and Ralph Shinton handled the refereeing. Arthur (Chappy) Couch wielded the hammer on the bell. The summary:

SEMI-FINAL ROUND

118-pound class—Sam Julian, Sands A. C., defeated William Fley, Pleasant Valley A. C.

126-pound class—Eddie Zivic, Willow Club, defeated Ray Jarres, Willow Club; Fritzie Zivic, Willow Club, defeated Gerald Clements, North Braddock A. C.

135-pound class—Hugo Donatelli, Burke A. C., defeated Leo Moan, Willow Club; Tony Shurra, unattached, defeated Charles Blozevich, Burke A. C.

147-pound class—Harry Seig, St. Boniface Lyceum, knocked out Ugo Valdeserri, Sands A. C., 2 rounds.

160-pound class—Jack Snyder, Y. M. H. A., defeated Joe Jefferies, Willow Club.

Heavyweight class—John Yelonsky, Sands A. C., defeated Joe Olschack, unattached; Sparky Ewalt, Pastorius A. C., knocked out George Perrung, H. T. Little A. C., two rounds.

FINAL ROUND.

Flannery Honored At Handball Banquet

Pittsburgh handball doffed its hat to one of the sports outstanding figures and a local leader with an enthusiastic dinner last night at the Keystone A. C., honoring J. Rogers Flannery, chariman of the national A. A. U. handball committee and former national junior champion. A crowd of close to 100 turned out for the affair.

Jacob Shulgold, local attorney and a handball star at the Y. M. H. A., served as toastmaster. Speakers included John Taylor and W. S. Haddock, local A. M. A. officials, and E. H. Eggleson, president of the Keystone A. C.

Seated at the speakers' table were W. S. Haddock, of the A. M. A.; Tom Thornton, of the P. A. A.; Curtiss Clark, Tom Fitzgerald, Theos Manos, Downtown Y. M. C. A. handball star and A. M. A. champion, and W. T. Rowe, athletic instructor at the Downtown Y. M. C. A.

Y EVENTS CALLED OFF

The volley ball game with the Oil City Y. M. C. A. team and the swimming meet with the Youngstown Y. M. C. A. team, scheduled at the Downtown Y. M. C. A. yesterday afternoon and last evening, both were canceled.

While soccer fans will be interested in local league games, many eyes will be turned towards Kinsman Field, Cleveland, where Morgan will be fighting the Sons of St. George team, to decide which shall enter the Western final round of the National amateur cup.

According to Manager Mangus, there is not competition with the amateur game in the Forest City this afternoon, which will be played at the home of the Bruells on Kinsman road. Clevelanders received the result of the Morgan-Shamrocks game last Sunday with mixed feelings, so that may bring out a record crowd.

NEWCOMER IN GAME

St. George is new to interstate soccer, but Kinsman road is a good venue to draw a crowd. Manager Mangus is shifting the local eleven for today's game. Buff Donnelli is not eligible to play since it is an amateur competition, so Bill O'Donnell will come into the line-up at center forward with Fred Donnelli going into the inside left position. Mitchell will enter the lineup at outside left in place of Barrafoldi. The work of Barrafoldi in the Shamrock game was very disappointing and practically all of the crosses from the wings came behind the inside men.

Mitchell is very aggressive and he should make a good partner for Charley Powell. The halfback line has not been changed and the defense will be kept intact. Of course, going into the battle without Buff Donnelli's educated toe is a tough break, but Morgan should win the game without any trouble. The other semi-final game finds the Detroit Germans meeting the Akron team at Akron. As the Pierpoints failed to get a dime on that recent trip to the Rubber town, there is every reason to feel that the Detroiters are going to take one on the chin financially.

P. A. A. Swimmers Top Duquesne

The P. A. A. swimming team defeated Duquesne Library in a dual meet in the P. A. A. pool last night, 33 to 26. The summary:

Relay—Won by P. A. A. (Chambers, Weaver, Geissinger and Beacon). Time 1:44.

100-yard breast stroke—Won by Maraz, Duquesne; Cochrane, P. A. A., second. Time 1:15.

50-yard free style—Won by Beacon, P. A. A.; Stinner, Duquesne, second; Geissinger, P. A. A., third. Time 25 2-5.

220-yard free style—Won by Chocho, Duquesne; Semango, Duquesne, second; Wenck, P. A. A. Time 2:35 4-5.

100-yard free style—Won by Beacon, P. A. A.; Stinner, Duquesne, second; Chambers, P. A. A., third. Time 60 4-5.

100-yard backstroke—Won by Brodi, Duquesne; Wenck, P. A. A., second; Weaver, P. A. A., third. Time 1:15 2-5.

Diving—Won by Derland Johnston, P. A. A.; Ford David, P. A. A., second.

Parade of Ring Veterans to Stir VIGNETTES OF SPORTS Memories; Soccer Hails Boost

By HARRY KECK, Sports Editor.

The plan of putting on an Oldtimers' Parade in the ring on the night of Father James R. Cox's amateur boxing show to raise funds to help carry on his relief work among the needy, in the Moose Temple, Wednesday night of next week, appears to be a good one. It is bound to conjure up many pleasant memories of the "good old days."

The committee in charge of the show has been compiling a list of the surviving district veterans of the roped arena who fought before the golden era of recent years and is asking them to appear on the night of the show. They will be required merely to take a bow in the ring as they are announced by Ray Eberle, who will act as master of ceremonies. As many as possible of the following are requested to be on hand to help make the affair the success it deserves to be:

Walter Monohan, Irish Chick Rodgers, Battling Connors, Paul Moore, Young Eppy, Young Goldie, Johnny Ray, Matt Gorman, Jack Burke, Jack Dillon, Frank Klaus, former middleweight champion; Jimmy Crawley, Young Henny, Dick Loadman, Patsy Scanlon, Young Ketchel, K. O. Circus, K. O. Jitney, Reed Brown, Trixie Brennan and Charley Dunn. (Remember them? . . . More memories . . . but what memories!)

Arnold Thornburg, Val Grunewald, Frank McNicholas, Mull Bowser, Kid Manuel, Mickey Gannon, Billy Berger, Jack Henderson (another referee, who fought as Jack Bruce), Bananas Diamond, Kid Stinger, Jack Abbott, Yock Henninger, Tony Norman, Tuffy Murray, Young Xeny, Jimmy Gray, Jack Sheehan, Johnny Hamm and Wilbur Johnston, that fine little amateur of years ago. (Wotta list . . . wotta list . . . and the memories of 'em!)

There are others, and they're all invited to be on hand. Stage seats will be held in reserve for them. There are some whose names come to mind, such as Jack Perry and Ray Pryel, who are in cities far removed from Pittsburgh and will not be able to be present, but what a treat it will be for both the older and younger generations if as many as possible of the oldtimers show up for the occasion. Many of the veterans will be glad to contribute their $1 or $2 for a ticket for the worthy cause, but any who feel that, being part of the show, they should not be taxed at the gate, will be welcome just the same.

Eight amateur bouts, showing off the finest talent in the district, will be staged, together with two exhibition sparring matches between oldtimers, to round out the program and make the night one that should live long in the memories of all who attend. Buck Crouse and George Chip, middleweight rivals of almost two decades ago, will box in one of the exhibitions, and Patsy Brannigan, one of the grandest little figures in the history of the sport, likely will oppose Chalky Wimler in another. Will there be memories of bygone days? And HOW!

Letters have been pouring into this department during the past week from soccer followers and officials expressing their appreciation of the boost given their game in the writer's story of the Morgan-Cleveland Shamrocks game at Morgan last Sunday, which saw the locals enter the second round of the National Challenge Cup competition with a 9-0 victory. Among those to come to bat with missives on the subject are Harry H. Fairfield, veteran soccer writer and official, and Pat F. O'Connor, of Braddock, vice president of the U. S. R. A. Among other things, Fairfield, in discussing the eagerness of the authorities to ban important Sunday soccer games, while they let baseball and football games go on unmolested, writes:

"To one who, as you know, has been very active in soccer affairs for upwards of 17 years, your article was a decided stimulant. It is good to know that one representative of the Fourth Estate is aligned with advocates of clean, wholesome, amateur sport, Sundays or weekdays.

"Soccer fans freely admit that in certain respects there is little comparison between soccer and football or baseball. Soccer appears to be an orphan sport, without political or financial backing, except such meager revenue as is deprived from collections at the gate. Perhaps that is why Goddess Justice invariably chooses a Sunday on which a gala soccer event is billed to lift the bandage from her eyes for needed relief from her labors; or is it because she must take a peep to confirm the fact that her scales are unweighted?"

Tony Zill, former Youngstown boxer, tells a good one about Carnera's tour of the United States during his first visit to this country. Tony's brother Al had Primo booked in Youngstown, and, two nights previously, Tony made a trip to another Ohio city to see the giant Venetian do his stuff. After the show he asked Leon See, Carnera's French manager, where the troupe was appearing the following night.

"In Denver, Colorado," was the reply.

Tony almost swooned.

"In Denver!" he exclaimed, aghast at the Frenchman's scrambled geography. "Why, you can't get there in time, much less return to Youngstown the next night."

"Well, we'll make it if we have to hire an airplane," was the cool reply.

Carnera was on hand for his Youngstown appearance—but it is a matter of record that he didn't make the Denver stopover.

Making Corner Eagles

Boys, how would you like to win a $5,000 scholarship to college? Or a trip to Detroit with all expenses paid? Or one of more than 900 other prizes totaling $50,000 in value?

This opportunity is offered you through the Sun-Telegraph Chapter of the Fisher Body Craftsman's Guild. All you have to do is to build a model of the famous Napoleonic coronation coach. The best coaches will be awarded the prizes. Simply enroll at your nearest General Motors dealer. You will be mailed plans and instructions telling how to build the coach. The contest is open until June 1, 1931. Everything's free.

Here's a lesson that will call for all the ingenuity, as well as all the perseverance, the model builder can muster! Lesson 14 is probably the one which will determine whether you earn your share of the 984 great awards in the Fisher Body Craftsman's Guild competition. Those who stay in the running in spite of the difficulties they are now encountering will stand an excellent chance in the final judging.

It is important for every member of the Sun-Telegraph Chapter to remember that he will not be expected to produce an exact duplicate of the eagles on the master model. And a carving which the boy does for himself, even though not technically perfect, will rate above any ready-made part which he might buy, provided only that it show evidence of patient, careful workmanship. Now go on with Lesson No. 14:

Continuing with the body ornamentation, our lesson this week has to do with making the corner eagles and the pillar capitals. Probably no other part of the coach will receive so much consideration as the eagles. They present a most interesting problem in craftsmanship. The pillar capitals may be turned on a lathe or they may be built up in the disc manner explained in making the wheel hubs, Lesson No. 5. If turned on a lathe, a template should first be cut out of cardboard to the exact shape and size of the capital as shown on Guild drawings, and each capital should be checked with this template.

120—In turning the capitals on a lathe, first square up a piece of stock to the size of the squares at top, 13-16"x13-16"x5" long. This will be long enough to make all four of the capitals.

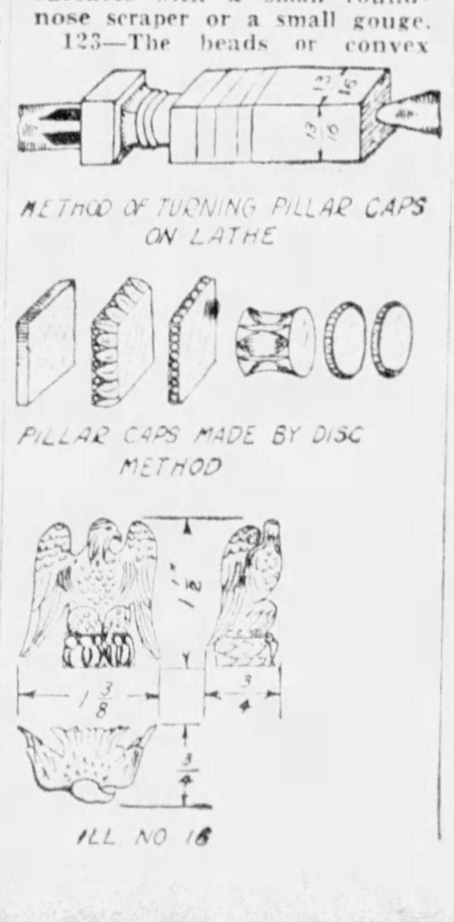
121—Square off one end of the stock on lathe and measure from this squared surface the length or height of the capital, 5/8".

122—Mark off the divisions of the design. Cut the concave surfaces with a small round-nose scraper or a small gouge.

123—The beads or convex surfaces are cut with a small skew chisel.

124—Check work with template and if O. K., finish with sandpaper.

125—The design on the square flat surfaces and those of the concave surface may be carved or painted.



Eagles

Undoubtedly the best method of making the eagles is to carve them out of wood, soap, wax, hard rubber or some other easily cut substance or material.

126—To do this you will need a piece of material 3/4x1 3/8x1 1/2 inches.

127—Trace the eagle design from the Guild drawing onto this stock. Carbon paper should be used. Notice that the eagles have a right and left facing. In order to make the eagle which faces opposite the way shown on Guild drawing, hold the drawing of eagle to window or electric light and trace the outline of eagle on back side of paper. Transfer to stock with carbon paper as above.

128—With a coping or jig saw cut eagle to outline.

129—Take a gouge or sharp knife and shape eagle body, wings, head, feet and base.

130—Cut in feather, facial and claw designs with small chisel or knife. These details may also be painted on after the body shaping has been done.

131—Another method would be to trace the designs on a thin piece of cardboard or wood and cut to outlines.

132—Build up the body and other features, using some such materials as plaster of paris, plastic wood, Savogran crack filler, etc. After these materials have set and are dry, carve and shape the necessary features.

Trapshooters Prepare for Best Season in Years

RIFLE EXPERTS SET FOR TITLE MEET IN OHIO

Many Recruits Added to Rapidly-Increasing Army Of Gunners, Figures Show.

Equipment and Improved Ammunition Responsible For Popularity of Sport.

By GIB MARSH

Patrons of the trapshooting sport already are discussing the prospects for the coming season, which usually opens in full swing in April. With hundreds of tournaments scheduled throughout the country by the Amateur Trapshooting Association of America, which is the national body in control of the sport, it is likely the clay target breakers will experience another active season. Many recruits were added to the army of gunners last year and that many more will be enlisted this season is likely.

Gib Marsh

Probably this year there will be 1,000 entries at the national championships at Vandalia, O. In discussing the past history of the sport with a number of veteran shooters recently, the question of the comparison of the ability of the old-time target breakers with the new field of clay bird busters was argued. There seems to be no doubt that the present-day group of target breakers have established better records and developed much quicker than the shooters of 25 years ago.

MODERN GUNS HELP

However there is no doubt that the present group of gunners learned to master the wing shooting sport under more advantageous conditions. They learned shooting with modern guns, modern ammunition, better target throwing traps and superior instructors. All these conditions favored the present-day novice in learning the sport. Today trapshooting guns are better bored, throwing just the ideal shot pattern for breaking targets and the guns are better balanced and the dimensions for the construction of guns are superior in every detail over the VV shotguns used by the veterans of 25 years ago.

In former years the clay target shooters used chiefly the ordinary double barrel gun and that gun could not be handled or pointed as expediently and with maximum accuracy as the modern single barrel or double barrel target breaking guns, equipped with modern ventilated ribs. And the boring of those old double barrel guns could not be compared with the present-day made guns which throw ideal shot patterns. However, if those old time shooters had been equipped with the modern guns and ammunition likely they would have made the same excellent records which have been registered by the present-day target breakers.

Certainly Charley Young, of Springfield, O., proved that he could compete with the present-day target breakers with modern guns and ammunition and another gunner, who was prominent 25 years ago and who is still winning is Guy V. Dering of Columbus, Wis. With modern ammunition and a modern devised gun Dering won the National singles with a score of 200 straight in 1926. Seventeen years ago he won the same title with a score of 185.

TROEH BEST OF ALL

However there was not a target breaker among the old timers who possessed the ability of Frank Troeh of Portland, Ore., who was the premier wing shot of the world three years ago. Troeh came into prominence just before the World War. He won the national singles in 1916 at Chicago with a score of 99 out of 100. And since that he has annexed every national championship title, singles, doubles and has won all of the Olympic titles abroad. The Keystone State has produced two national winners, Charles H. Newcomb and Stevenson M. Crothers, both of Philadelphia. Newcomb is still a wonderful shooter, but was in his prime in 1915. Crothers is now in his prime and has been a consistent winner for the last 10 years.

The shooters of 25 and 30 years ago used guns of extreme stock drop dimensions, having stock drops of 2½ and 2¾ inches and those dimensions have been discarded as antique and have been supplanted with guns of straighter dimentions and there is no doubt that a gun of "straight" dimensions must be used in the clay target breaking sport, stocks of 1¾, 1⅞ or 2 inches drop at heel.

AMMUNITION IMPROVED

Recognizing the rapid progress the trapshooting sport was making the gun makers of this country by scientific study and calculations devised guns to be used exclusively for the trapshooting sport and the ballistic experts were successful in devising better cartridges and loads, loads which included a minimum of recoil as compared with the target loads of 25 years ago.

So nearly perfect are the guns and ammunition made for the sport today that many women have taken up the shooting pastime. Twenty-five years ago women trapshooters were rare. In fact there was just one, the famous Annie Oakley, who was a professional. And today there are a number of women trapshooters who have excelled the best records made by the late Annie Oakley. Reducing the recoil of trap loads induced women to take up the sport.

There is no doubt the present day gunners have superior advantages over the old timers, better guns, superior ammunition and the benefit of superior instruction. The shooters of 25 years ago were regarded as stars when they finished a season with a general average of 92 per cent and better. To land a general average championship now an average of 98 per cent and better must be made.

School League Best Bets for Coming Week

CITY LEAGUE.

SECTION I.

Westinghouse vs. Fifth Avenue at Fifth. A lot can happen if Fifth rises to the occasion and upsets the leaders. South will gain a tie for the first half if Westinghouse loses.

SECTION II.

HARVARD GETS CARNEGIE O. K.

BOSTON, Jan. 24.—(AP.)—An improvement in athletic conditions at Harvard and Boston College since the publication of the Carnegie Foundation report has been noted by John T. McGovern, author of the famous Bulletin 23. He is making a supplementary survey of college athletics and visited both institutions to study the effect of his Bulletin 23.

"The situation at Harvard and Boston College is perfect," he said, "and the concessions and jobs are allotted now on the basis of need and of scholarship, with adaptability only a minor factor and athletic ability ignored entirely."

NEW HAVEN, Conn., Jan. 24.—(AP.)—Officials of the Yale Athletic Association today announced that the experiment of coachless baseball would be continued for one year in games of the Eastern Intercollegiate League.

This announcement followed upon receipt of word that Harvard, which, like Yale, instituted the practice last year, would abandon the plan this year. Under this system, Coach Joe Wood will remain off the bench during play, leaving field direction of the nine during the games to Capt. Fay Vincent.

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., Jan. 24.—(AP.)—The decision to end coachless baseball at Harvard was announced today by Athletic Director William J. Bingham. He said Coach Fred Mitchell would direct the Crimson nine from the bench in every game this year.

Grid Season Closes Today

SAN FRANCISCO, Jan. 24.—(INS.)—The football season will be brought to a belated close here tomorrow when two all-star teams clash in a Knights of Columbus charity game.

One team is headed by Larry Bettencourt, who gained all-America honors while playing center for St. Mary's, while the other is headed by the redoubtable Joe Savoldi, former Notre Dame fullback.

Bettencourt's aggregation for the most part is made up of former St. Mary's players. A notable exception is Ernie Nevers, the ex-Stanford star fullback, who will be in there punching the line tomorrow.

Savoldi's team is well sprinkled with former Southern California players.

Five New Schools On Jeannette Card

JEANNETTE, Pa., Jan. 24.—Five new schools appear on the 1931 schedule of the Jeannette High School football squad, according to the complete card of nine games made public.

New schools carded by the Rubber City are Greensburg, West Newton, Monessen, Norwin and Sewickley Township. There is one open date on the schedule for which a game will be sought. This date was caused by the dropping of Youngwood, a Class B school. Jeannette has but five Class A games carded and will fill the one with a team in that class. The complete schedule follows:

September 19, Sewickley Township at home; September 26, West Newton at home; October 3, Mt. Pleasant at home; October 10, Hurst at home; October 17, Monessen away; October 24, Ford City at home; October 31, Norwin at home; November 7, [illegible] away; November 14, Greensburg away; November [illegible], [illegible] at home; November 26, Thanksgiving, [illegible] Union at [illegible].

LOCAL COLLEGE FIVES TURN TO EXAMINATIONS

W. Va.-Wesleyan and Westminster-Geneva Clashes Feature Week's Program.

Slippery Rock and St. Francis Stage Return Battle At Loretto Thursday.

Topped by a Tri-State Conference feature tomorrow night and wound up by the second game of the series between West Virginia and West Virginia Wesleyan Saturday, the tri-state district offers a curtailed and unimpressive basketball program for the coming week.

All three of the local varsity quintets are idle. Examinations are keeping Pitt, Tech and the Dukes busy with other things beside basketballs, blocks and pivots and the same goes for other college quints in the section.

TITANS AT GENEVA

The Westminster-Geneva game tomorrow in Beaver Falls possibly is the most attractive offering of the entire week. The Titans attracted much attention last week through the cancellation of the two games supposedly booked with the Dukes. The removal of the annual Duquesne-Westminster series from the season's card was a blow to the color and attractiveness of the campaign.

Geneva, playing three games last week, will be about as busy as any other team in the section again this week. The Covenanters meet Westminster tomorrow and then, after resting Tuesday, appear in Morgantown Wednesday to meet Francis Stadsvold's Mountaineers.

There are no games booked Tuesday, but Wednesday, in addition to the Covenanter-Mountaineer tilt, Penn State plays the Navy at Annapolis and Grove City starts off on a two-day trip, meeting Juniata at Huntington.

MEET IN RETURN GAME

Thursday, Slippery Rock engages St. Francis at Loretto in a return match, the Teachers having trounced the Red Flash two weeks ago, and Grove City meets St. Thomas in Scranton.

Friday finds Canisus battling Thiel's Lutherans in Greenville and Slippery Rock engaging the Millersville Teachers at Millersville.

West Virginia, beaten by Wesleyan's Bobcats in Morgantown earlier in the season, hopes for sweet revenge in Buckhannon Saturday night. Slippery Rock winds up its three-game trip by meeting West Chester at West Chester. Colgate tackles Penn State at State College and Thiel goes to Cleveland for a clash with John Carroll.

CUE LEADERS REMAIN IN TIE

CHICAGO, Jan. 24.—(AP.)—Arthur Thurnblad, of Chicago, and the fiery Otto Reiselt, of Philadelphia, extended their winning streaks to four each and remained deadlocked for the technical lead in the world three-cushion billiard championship fight today.

Thurnblad breezed to an easy victory in forging his fourth victory, swamping Frank Scoville, of Buffalo, 50 to 27, in 54 innings. He played his usual cautious game and the Buffalo player repeatedly was confronted with almost impossible shots. Thurnblad's high run was three to Scoville's four. It was the fourth defeat in five games for Scoville, who upset Champion Johnny Layton in the opening match.

Reiselt was forced to fight the hardest match in the tournament to keep his slate clean. He gained a 41-to-26 edge on his rival, Charles Jordan, of Los Angeles, in the forty-third innings but the coast star spurted and had the result in doubt until Reiselt clicked off his final point. Reiselt's high run, eight points, tied the tournament record. Jordan, loser of four straight games, scored a high run of five.

Allen Hall, of Chicago, the only other undefeated player in the eight-man tournament, rested on his record of three victories in as many games today and will not return to action until tomorrow.

Johnny Layton, defending champion, defeated Tiff Denton, of Kansas City, 50 to 43, tonight.

Longmire, shooting from the 17-yard rise, bagged 68 of his quota of 75 clay targets.

SCHOOL FIVES FINISH FIRST HALF TUESDAY

Two Sections of W. P. I. A. L. Show Leaders In Deadlocks for Title.

Westinghouse Faces Test In Battle With Fifth Avenue; Teams Idle Friday.

First half races in both the City League and the W. P. I. A. L. come to a close this week, with the result that the scholastic court card is whittled down to almost half its usual size. There are no league contests scheduled for Friday, all the action being crowded into Tuesday's program.

As the first round campaign draws to a close, only two sections in the W. P. I. A. L. have ties for first place, and both deadlocks will be settled with Tuesday's game. In Section IV, New Brighton and Beaver Falls, rivals of long standing, are honors with six triumphs and no defeats. In Section V, Monessen and Charleroi are in the same fix, both having won five contests and also are unbeaten. These rivals meet Tuesday, Beaver Falls appearing at New Brighton and Monessen facing its test at Charleroi.

TEST FOR WESTINGHOUSE

In the City League, which completes its initial round Tuesday, Westinghouse and Allegheny are out in front, undefeated and with Allegheny almost certain to come through in its final first half clash with a triumph. Westinghouse, opposing the dangerous Fifth Avenue entry, and due for an off day, may experience more difficulty in winding up ahead. In the event Fifth should upset the procedure and take the Silver Lakers, South, by defeating Schenley, will gain a tie with the present leaders.

Allegheny should experience little difficulty in turning aside the challenge, if it may be termed such, of Langley. Should the North Siders falter in this, the final test, then South Hills is ready to step in and claim part ownership of first place, provided, of course, it takes Carrick Tuesday.

Inasmuch as neither Westinghouse or Allegheny is due to suffer any serious losses through the rigors of mid-term graduation, triumps for their arms this week will give them excellent holds on their respective sections for the second half chase. In Section I, Westinghouse may look for serious opposition from the hit-or-miss Schenley team, which, while it loses a clever forward in Evans, gains valuable strength in Art Hyatt, brother of the famous Pitt star, who becomes eligible for the second half contesting. South loses strength and Fifth Avenue figures to remain about the same.

Fourteen teams are practically secure in sectional W. P. I. A. L. leads. New Kensington, defending both the sectional and league championship, is secure in Section I. Ambridge remains undefeated in Section II, and is almost a sure pop to get back into the elimination tournament again this year. New Castle has overcome all opposition in Section III and in Section VI, Ford City, led by the veteran and clever Negro center, Bass, is riding high, wide and handsome.

HOMESTEAD IN FRONT

Homestead has stepped to the fore again in Section VII. Scott High, of North Braddock, appears to have things well in hand in Section VIII and in Section IX, McKees Rocks has monopolized the spotlight for the second year in a row.

In Section X, Greensburg has replaced Uniontown. Ed Paulie's Swissvalians are riding the crest in Section XI again and Dunbar has retained its laurels in Section XII.

South Union is half a game ahead of North Union in Section XIII. McDonald has taken Hickory's place, temporarily at least, in Section XIV, and Washington has ousted Waynesburg in Section XV. Bentleyville is at the top of the new section, Division XIV.

Winding up the first round play this week, some of the leaders are confronted with what may develop into serious opposition. In Section VI, Ford City has Katy Easterday's Kittanning quint to get past at Kittanning. North Braddock won't find Braddock exactly a setup in a Section VIII feature. Mt. Lebanon is close on the heels of McKees Rocks in Section IX, and may gain ground by beating Stowe this week, while the Rox team is scrapping with formidable Coraopolis.

Onslow Spins Funny Tales Of the Bushes

Jack Onslow, former Pirate coach, always is good for some interesting tales of the diamond. Residing in Pittsburgh at present, Jack is awaiting the Phillies' training bell. Recently Onslow was given a lieutenant's commission in the Quaker army; he will be second in command to Burt Shotton in the leadership of the Phillies.

Onslow's baseball career has as many colors as a home-spun comfort, he having served as player and manager in a myriad of bush circuits. All the while he has been able to see the humorous side of the sport. Jack is of the aggressive, "goat-getting" type, but when the joke is on him he gets as much kick out of it as when he turns the tables.

Onslow was managing a Virginia League club and was the first-string catcher of his nine when he picked up a country boy who had all the markings of a star pitcher. The lad was as big as Dazzy Vance, but as rough as sandpaper insofar as inside baseball was concerned; moreover, the education of the cornfed boy seems to have been somewhat neglected.

But Hank was an earnest fellow who did nothing by halves, and Onslow complimented him for his positive leanings. Eventually he had the rookie groomed to start a game and the whole team was tickled as the rural youth mowed down the opposition through several innings.

Onslow's team was in the late innings with a lead of one or two runs when the farm phenom weakened a bit. In time he had the bases loaded, but two were out and he appeared to be regaining his composure, so Onslow allowed him to stay on the slab, meantime coaching him carefully.

A dangerous hitter came up to face the boy in the crisis. He seemed to be out of the hole when he made the good batter hit a weak roller in front of the plate. Rushing in, the eager rookie picked up the ball and then, putting everything he had on his throw to first, he let fly with a shot that missed the target completely. As the ball rolled around the ramparts, three runs went over.

Onslow was one of the first to recover from the shock. He decided a word of encouragement was needed rather than censure.

"Never mind that, Hank," sympathized the manager. "That's the way to throw that ball—put something on it when you let go of that apple."

"Yer dang right I will, boss," retorted the musher. "You don't hear me makin' no lullabies!"

Onslow was coach for the Newark Bears last year. After Al Mamaux had replaced Tris Speaker as pilot of the International League outfit, the officials asked Onslow to take to the tall and uncut in quest of promising baseball players. Jack explored a number of circuits and, with night baseball in progress, encountered some strange sights.

Texas League night baseball is a big issue, but the innovation is anything but popular with the players, who complain when they are kept on the dewy plots until midnight. An extra-inning game is likely to see the athletes under the showers at about 1 a. m.

"I saw one of those long night games in Waco," quoth Jack. "After the battle was over, I entered the clubhouse. One of the first things to greet me was a big sign which read:

"'Notice—All players must be in bed by 6 o'clock.'"—CHARLES J. DOYLE.

Clark to Succeed Page at Indiana

CHICAGO, Jan. 24.—(INS.)—George (Potsy) Clark, former football coach and director of athletics at Butler University, Indianapolis, will succeed H. O. (Pat) Page as football coach at the University of Indiana, Chicago alumni of the latter school declared today.

Although both Clark and the university officials refused to comment, it was said Clark has the job sewed up. The salary he is to receive was reported at $10,000 per year.

GROVE CITY BEATEN

GROVE CITY, Pa., Jan. 24.—John Pasco and Bob Willis led the Sharpsville High quint to a 24-6 win over Grove City High. The lineup:

Grove City—6.		Sharpsville—24.
Gutsker	F	Clary
Monk	F	Williams
Kelly	C	Willis
Glessner	G	Mertz
Henderson	G	Stanton

Field goals—Kelly, Clary, Willis 4, Stanton 2, Pasco 4. Fouls—Grove City, 4 out of 10; Sharpsville, 2 out of 11. Referee—Richards.

AUTOMOBILE NEWS

MARMON CHIEF IS HONORED FOR NEW '16' DESIGN

Awarded Medal for Year's Most Noteworthy Work By Auto Engineer Society.

The annual meeting of the metropolitan section of the Society of Automotive Engineers, held during the New York show, provided one of the outstanding features of the affair when the organization awarded to Col. Howard C. Marmon, vice president in charge of engineering of the Marmon Motor Car Company, a medal for the year's most noteworthy automotive accomplishment in the development of passenger cars.

The award was made to Col. Marmon for his design of the 200-horsepower, all-aluminum engine in the new Marmon "16," which was formally presented to the public at the New York show and introduced to Pittsburgh at last week's auto exhibit.

Selection of the Marmon "16" engine as the year's outstanding automotive development was made by a committee composed of several of the leading figures in the Metropolitan section.

The Marmon "16" engine has been in the course of development by Col. Marmon for more than four years. Developing 200 horsepower, it is said, the engine is an all-aluminum power plant with case-hardened steel cylinders, which are almost wearproof, and aluminum bronze valve seats. Weighing but 930 pounds, the engine has the highest ratio of power to weight ever attained in a passenger car, Marmon engineers claim.

Along with two new Marmon straight "8's", the new 70 and the new 88, the "16" is being introduced at automobile shows throughout the country. The "16" has a wheelbase of 145 inches.

Projectile lines are emphasized throughout, with wind resistance reduced to a minimum and all unsightly mechanical details, both front and rear, hidden from view.

OVER SOUTH NEGLEY, IN HIGH, AT 24

WITH FOUR PASSENGERS—Although South Negley avenue was covered with snow and ice last Thursday, this Auburn 8-98 standard sedan, with four passengers, was driven over that tortuous grade in high gear. The climb was made from a right turn off Fifth avenue at five miles an hour in high gear and completed at 24 miles an hour. In another test a left turn was made from Perrysville avenue, at three miles an hour in high gear, and the climb over Federal street extension completed at 32 miles an hour. Four passengers also were carried on that run. The tests were made under direction of J. A. O'Malley, Pittsburgh Auburn Company.

LONG-DISTANCE AUTO DISPLAYED

New York to San Francisco, Minneapolis or New Orleans, have been mere incidents in the life of one automobile which was displayed at Pittsburgh's automobile show last week.

It has only been in existence for six months, but in that brief period has traveled 66,458 miles, and its owner, the Dodge Brothers Corporation, expect it to run another 100,000 miles during this year.

Displayed by Frank D. Saupp, Inc., the car was locked tightly and all of its operating parts, hood covers and doors were fastened with seals placed there by Ray Priest, the American Automobile Association contest board observer, who has been riding in the car since it started its long trek back and forth across the country.

The President of the United States, 16 governors, 525 mayors of cities, head the list of some 3,500 Dodge dealers that the marathon car has visited since it started its run, July 1, 1930.

The complete record of the car, its operation cost, its number of miles per day, the time it is running each day, etc., is kept by the AAA contest board observer, so that in the end, the run will provide a valuable record of conditions relative to automobile travel in the United States as well as be a thorough test of the stamina of the car.

Graham Regains 200-Mile Record

By breaking the speed mark for 200 miles for the fourth time in two years, a Graham eight has regained for America the international record previously held by the French Delage. The new time is 117 minutes 48.38 seconds, an average speed of 101.85 miles per hour. The record-breaking run was made at Montlhery, France, last month by D. M. K. Marendaz, an English speed enthusiast.

The new record climaxes a two-year duel between Delage and Graham, during which the international Class B record (for cars of 5,001 to 8,000 cubic centimeters displacement) has shifted between the two makes five times.

SUNOCO CHIEF LAUDS PRODUCT

In an effort to find a new market for surplus alcohol stocks, the government of Brazil recently published a decree that imported gasoline contain 10 per cent of native alcohol after April 1, according to J. O. Craig, who is local manager for the Sun Oil Company.

Mr. Craig said this will undoubtedly achieve the purpose of increasing the consumption of local alcohol, but, from experiments which have been conducted by almost every major oil company, it certainly will not have much effect upon the efficiency of gasoline as a motor fuel. He added:

"We have found that in the very highest of high compression motors this mixture may be slightly beneficial, but for the average car there is nothing as satisfactory as the present day motor fuel.

"By exercising the utmost manufacturing car it is possible today to refine a gasoline of such outstanding quality that any outside ingredient is not required to increase its performance. Our own Blue Sunoco is an outstanding example of what I mean. It is a pure petroleum product, yet has a splendid knockless rating, all the extra power you could ask and completes its desirability by selling at regular gas price."

Auto Show Booths Furnishings Praised

Visitors to the automobile show at Motor Square Garden last week commented on the attractive and appropriate furnishing of the booths, installed under the personal direction of S. J. Hahn, of the Hahn Furniture Company. The booths were fitted in a summery atmosphere, with sun-room type of furniture, lamps and rugs. The striking color schemes of the furniture, with their bright upholsterings, provided perfect backgrounds for the automobiles of 1931.

New Dodge Cars Wired for Radio

All closed body models of Dodge Brothers new six and eight line as well as the standard six and eight line, are factory wired for the immediate installation of Transitone, the pioneer automobile radio.

Cadillac Cooled By Speedy Pump

To insure perfect cooling of a Cadillac V-8 engine, a large-capacity pump circulates water at the rate of 98 gallons a minute through wide channels in each cylinder block.

Chevrolet Plans Aggressive Paper Advertising Drive

Another aggressive advertising campaign, with newspaper display columns carrying the brunt of the attack, is promised for this year by R. K. White, advertising manager of the Chevrolet Motor Company.

Long one of the nation's leading advertisers, the Chevrolet organization lent its indorsement to the pulling power of the newspaper by using 6,700 dailies and weeklies to announce its new 1931 car in November, the largest newspaper schedule ever used by Chevrolet in one campaign since the inception of the company. This move was made despite sub-normal business conditions and the generally slackened promotional activities of manufacturers in and out of the automobile industry.

MOTOR CHIEF SEES UPTURN

DETROIT, Jan. 24.—Genuine enthusiasm and definite signs of an early upturn in business are seen by L. G. Peed, general sales manager of De Soto Motor Corporation, in a report to De Soto officials here upon the completion of one-half of his 15,500-mile swing around the United States.

The De Soto sales executive left New York immediately after the auto show for a country-wide visit with dealers and salesmen of the De Soto group. At the completion of the journey he will have conducted meetings in 16 key cities in the nation. Accompanying him are Dr. Paul Ivey, professor of merchandising in the University of Southern California, and Harry Moock, national authority on merchandising and now connected with Chrysler Corporation as director of used car activities.

ENTERS

AGENCY FIELD—Frederick Dickinson, former director of advertising of the Hupp Motor Car Corporation, has joined the staff of Lennen & Mitchell, Inc., advertising agents, as vice president. His broad experience in the automotive and newspaper fields, including 15 years as advertising manager for Hupp Motors (1916 to date), fits him for the work he has undertaken in the agency field. He assumes his new duties February 16.

FREE WHEELING HELD OPTIONAL

Perhaps the greatest thing about free wheeling in its present stage is that the operator can take it or leave it alone. With the method of operation which Studebaker introduced last July it is possible to drive the car in the conventional manner, and with the conventional results, comments G. D. Jay, Jr., of the Studebaker Sales Company of Pittsburgh.

The best possible indorsement of the system is that Lincoln, Hupp, Auburn and Pierce-Arrow were lined up for its adoption so quickly after Studebaker put it out, that still others are considering it now. This could not have happened had not its introduction been entirely satisfactory.

While American exploitation of free wheeling started only last July, the idea is an old one to the engineers. Some of the first Mercedes cars imported into this country many years ago embodied the free-wheeling principle. And on the other side of the Atlantic, several makers have been dabbling with it for an appreciable time.

Life of the clutch is materially increased by free wheeling, because the clutch is used less frequently. It is not necessary to release the clutch after starting in low gear and shifting to second unless the car is brought to a speed lower than that corresponding to the idling speed of the engine, shifts between second and high being made by releasing the accelerator.

Transmission gears and bearings benefit by the elimination of coasting loads. The actual saving in fuel and oil which can be credited to free wheeling, is, of course, determined to a large extent by the character of the roads, traffic conditions and the personal habits of the driver.

Pittsburgher Named To Auto Zone Board

CHICAGO, Jan. 24.—T. I. Jenks, of the Pittsburgh Auto Equipment Company, Pittsburgh, has been named a member of the zone committee of the Motor and Equipment Association to assist in developing in Western Pennsylvania, Ohio and West Virginia the nation-wide program sponsored by the association to further better maintenance practices on the part of the country's 25,000,000 car owners.

A regular inspection service will be offered to car owners to uncover the mechanical or operating defects which would result in expensive repairs, serious accidents or needless depreciation if not caught in time.

Hudson Car Output Shows Wide Gain

The Hudson Motor Car Company produced 11,208 cars from the time the new Hudson and Essex models were introduced late in November as against 4,180 cars during the similar period in 1929-30, according to William J. McAneeny, president and general manager.

More than 10,000 men are now at work in the Detroit plant, an increase of 6,000 since the new program got under way. These figures are significant, believes McAneeny, because Hudson was one of the first to introduce new models this year and is therefore in a position to report the trend of automobile business.

Rents in Curtains Enlarge Quickly

Rents in the open car curtains have a way of spreading quickly. The thoughtful car owner will not put off the job of repairing them or having them repaired when they are small.

MAN WHO SLEW OVER 'POVERTY' HAD $168,000

Uniontown Lawyer Killed Wife, Children and Self; Personal Property Valued

UNIONTOWN, Pa., Jan. 24.—Attorney R. W. Playford last November 13 killed his wife, three children and himself, because he feared all would go to the poor house.

Today appraisers set a valie of $168,836 on his personal estate.

The inventory as filed with Register O. Frank Ruse, showed that Mr. Playford at the time of the tragedy, possessed $7,208.40 in cash and bonds. His stocks are valued at $153,234.38; furnishings and fixtures of his home at $3,277.10 and miscellaneous, $3,031.25.

CHILDREN'S SAVINGS

Inventories of the personal property of the three children were reported as follows:

Pauline, $3,745.17; Margaret, $2,347.77 and Nancy, $1,983.43. For the most part these amounts consisted of school savings and insurance policies.

Mr. Playford's estate will total nearly a quarter of a million dollars as his Oakland avenue home is valued at between $85,000 and $90,000.

Just a few days before he shot his wife and children as they slept, and then sent a bullet into his brain, Mr. Playford had expressed the fear that they would end in the poor house.

ESTATE IN DISPUTE

By the terms of a will written a week before the tragedy, all the estate was left to a sister, Mrs. Blanche Playford Beyle, of Uniontown, and a brother, Charles Playford, of Baltimore.

Owing to the fact that Mrs. Playford, formerly of Baltimore, outlived by more than 10 hours the other victims, controversy over the distribution of the estate is in prospect. It has been reported that a compromise has been reached with heirs of Mrs. Playford.

Mr. Playford provided the distribution of the estate to his brother and sister in case he outlived his wife and three children.

Obituary

John B. Harrison, Sr.

Funeral services for John B. Harrison, Sr., who died in the West Penn Hospital Saturday, will be held Monday afternoon in Taylor's funeral parlor, 7127 Kelly street, Homewood. Mr. Harrison was born in Old Allegheny in 1868, and had been a resident in Pittsburgh most of his life. For a period he was engaged in the painting business in Pittsburgh and later in the restaurant business in Blairsville, Pa. For the past 16 years he was connected with the C. G. Hussey & Company, of Pittsburgh. Mr. Harrison leaves his wife, Mrs. Anna Belle Crawford Harrison; a son, John B. Harrison, Jr.; two daughters, Miss Margaret B. Harrison and Miss Elizabeth C. Harrison; a brother, George A. Harrison, all of Pittsburgh, and two sisters, Mrs. Clarissa McMillen, of Los Angeles, and Mrs. W. D. Harrold, of Pittsburgh.

James Hayden.

Funeral services for James Hayden, Sr., 59, who died yesterday at his home, 412 Rose street, Clairton, will be held Tuesday morning. Mr. Hayden was born in Ireland. He had resided in Clairton for 29 years, where he was employed as foreman of the Clairton mills. He was a charter member of St. Clare's Roman Catholic Church. He leaves his wife, Mrs. Margaret Hayden; four daughters, Miss Kathryn, Miss Lucille, Miss Margaret Hayden, and Mrs. William Comensky; a son, James J. Hayden, Jr., and two sisters, Mrs. Agnes Barry and Miss Kate Hayden, all of Clairton. Interment will be in Calvary Cemetery, Elizabeth.

Frank O. VanGorder.

Frank Oakman VanGorder, a life-long resident of Pittsburgh, died last night at his residence, the Kenmar Hotel, Shady avenue, following an illness of two months. For many years he was engaged in the real estate business in East Liberty, and of late had been associated with the Edward A. Woods Company. He leaves his widow, Harriet R. VanGorder; a son, Dr. George W. VanGorder, of Boston; two daughters, Mrs. Joseph F. Griggs, of Tacoma, Wash., and Miss Harriet R. VanGorder; a brother, Grant U. VanGorder, and two sisters, Mrs. O. C. Pegan, and Miss Meriam G. VanGorder, of Chester, Pa.

David S. Osgood.

Funeral services for David S. Osgood, retired furniture merchant and realtor, who died Friday in the Montefiore Hospital, will be held today at the Jewish Home for Aged, of which he was the founder. Mr. Osgood lived at the home. He was also one of the founders of the Beth Jacob Congregation and the Hebrew Institute. He leaves two sons, Morris and Samuel Osgood; three daughters, Mrs. J. Breakstone, Mrs. J. Weisburg and Mrs. Jacob T. York, and 20 grandchildren.

Mrs. Belle Martin.

Funeral services for Mrs. Belle Christy Martin, widow of Harry C. Martin, who died yesterday at her home, 510 North avenue, Wilkinsburg, will be held at the family residence tomorrow evening. She leaves four sisters, Mrs. S. T. Fulton, Alva, Okla.; Mrs. A. R. May, McKeesport; Mrs. W. G. Magill and Miss Minnie Christy, of Pittsburgh, and a brother, Samuel H. Christy, of Pueblo, Col. Interment will be in Derry, Pa.

HONOR BURNS ON NATAL DAY

Today is the one hundred and seventy-second birthday of Robert Burns.

The occasion was observed by local Scots and admirers of the great poet last night at an entertainment and dance held in the Moose Temple under the auspices of Clan Cameron, No. 120.

Entertainment was given by Scottish singers and dancers brought here from New York and Canada. Many of Burns' lyrics were read. After the entertainment there was dancing.

Tuesday night, Clan Douglas of Wilkinsburg, will celebrate Burns' birthday. Throughout the week other clans in Western Pennsylvania will mark the anniversary.

Columbus Glee Club To Visit Pittsburgh

The Varsity Glee Club of Capital University, Columbus, O., will include Pittsburgh in their silver jubilee tour. They will give a concert in Carnegie Music Hall, Oakland, the evening of February 12, Washington's Birthday, under auspices of the Woman's Missionary Conference of the American Lutheran Church, Pittsburgh district.

Twenty-one years ago the Capital singers, pioneers of college glee clubs, gave a concert here, the first time they had appeared outside of Ohio state. Their jubilee tour next month will include three states.

BENEFIT SHOW FOR JOBLESS

Twenty acts, a 12-piece orchestra and a first-run feature picture will comprise a benefit entertainment at the Schenley Theater, next Sunday for needy and unemployed in the Oakland district by the Fourth Ward Relief Fund Committee. There will be two shows, at 2 and 8 o'clock.

County and city officials, civic and industrial leaders are sponsoring the event.

Senator James J. Coyne has been appointed honorary chairman; Edward Flaherty, chief court deputy, will serve as general chairman. Other officers are M. J. Muldowney, vice chairman; William Miller, secretary; T. J. Flaherty, treasurer. The advisory committee includes Judge J. P. Egan, Magistrate James O'Connor, Alderman L. C. Wicks, Thomas Hansberry, John A. Freivogel, P. F. McKnight, A. Mamaux, R. J. Leahy, Harry Brown, Louis Swartz and O. C. Young. Chairman of committees are Frank Steele, entertainment; John Ridge, publicity; Thomas Coyne, tickets; Louis Jacobs, program.

The Fourth Ward Relief Fund Committee, organized some time ago with an initial contribution of $1,000 by the Oakland Board of Trade, has already expended more than $5,000 for relief.

JOBS OF 10 NEW CITY NURSES IN JEOPARDY

Girls Appointed by Maits May Be Dropped After Civil Service Tests.

Ten nurses appointed in the City Bureau of Child Welfare by Health Director C. R. Maits following investigation with the Mayor, today were fearful that their jobs might not remain on a permanent basis due to civil service regulations.

Because there have been no civil service examinations in this class for more than a year, when Dr. Maits needed the nurses he appointed them arbitrarily. Ratings held by applicants become obsolete after one year. Thomas F. Hansberry, secretary to the Civil Service Commission, pointed out yesterday.

NEW TESTS LOOM

More than 200 names are on the commission's list of applications for nursing jobs and the new nurses were picked from this group. New examinations will be held within the next three months, it is understood.

When the test is called the appointees may be dropped if they fail to rank among the first 20 in examination standing.

The present year, so far, has been one of the busiest for the Commission's secretary. More applications for city jobs are on file than ever before. One thousand men applied for the 350 police jobs the department of public safety said a month ago were necessary for the city's protection against crime. Men accustomed to "white collar jobs"—bookkeepers, clerks and stenographers—have asked for any kind of work. The city has few jobs to offer.

NAMED PROVISIONALLY

Those named to the bureau provisionally at salaries of $128 monthly are:

Alice Boyle, 6916 Thomas boulevard; Rose Burns, 1265 Termon avenue; Emma Evans, 312 North Aiken avenue; Agnes M. Fischer, 248 Orchard place; Nevada Ford, 118 West Ohio street; Mrs. Anna M. Lunk, 105 Penfield place; Edith Meloy, 3833 Brighton road; Dorothy Schaut, 4216 Geneva street; Ann Stockfish, 518 South Mathilda street, and Mrs. Ethel H. Swindler, 340 Craft avenue.

Abbie Kirk, of Chesterfield road, has been named supervisor of nurses in the bureau of infectuous diseases.

Thieves Loot Home As Family Moves

Three Negroes using a skeleton key, entered the home of Mrs. John K. Best, 2341 Sidney street, yesterday while members of the family were engaged in moving household goods from their former home half a block away and obtained clothing valued at $127, she reported to South Side police. Children playing in the street saw the Negroes leaving with filled sacks.

Mrs. Tibbett, Film Star's Mother, Dies

NEW YORK, Jan. 24.—(AP)—Mrs. Frances Ellen Tibbett, mother of Lawrence Tibbett, opera and screen star, died of pneumonia early today at the Savoy-Plaza Hotel. She had been seriously ill for a week. The singer and his wife were at the bedside, in addition to a daughter, Miss Betty Tibbett.

Auto Executive Sees 1931 Mark Start of Trade Pickup

By FREDERICK J. HAYNES

Vice President, Franklin Automobile Company

Nineteen thirty should not be allowed to go down in history as a year devoid of benefits.

Because of happening in that year, every earnest, thinking merchant and manufacturer should benefit. Logically since 1930 has passed, we are one year nearer to, if not at the end of, depressed business activities.

Profiting by the experience of 1930, everyone will begin 1931 with a much clearer and more comprehensive viewpoint. Waste and extravagance of the past which attached themselves to business have been eliminated; expenses cut down so as to be properly proportioned to the business expected. Doubtful values have been written down wholly or in part.

With business men's losses behind them, and fully aware of the need for the most persistent, continuous and painstaking effort, nothing can keep American business from succeeding and making 1931 a prosperous year.

While no longer "America's infant industry," the automobile still has growth ahead that will continue to write business romance. But the story will be one of strong, orderly, matured methods which have enabled it to meet successfully the problems of the year just closed.

Automobile merchandising will be more active and efficient, and will take into account fully the mutuality of interest between manufacturer and dealers. The line of promotion that will show the best results will be that which starts primarily with a good product, honestly priced, and properly serviced.

Follow Pershing's Story and Win Cash!

$3,000.00 IN CASH PRIZES

For Readers of the Sun-Telegraph Who Follow Pershing's Own Story of the War

CAREFULLY READ THESE SIMPLE RULES

RULE 1—With the beginning of the publication of General Pershing's Own Story of the World War, Monday, January 12, 1931, the daily and Sunday Pittsburgh Sun-Telegraph inaugurates a Pershing test in which $3,000.00 in cash prizes will be awarded to readers who submit the correct or most nearly correct answers to a set of ten questions pertaining to dates and episodes chronicled in the Pershing narrative. Contestants will also be asked to submit a letter of not more than 200 words to the question "What is the most important episodes chronicled in the Pershing memoirs published in the Sun-Telegraph, and why?" This letter will be judged as a part of the Pershing test with the answers to the ten questions. The test questions will be published from time to time during the publication of the story in the Sun-Telegraph and contestants will be allowed ten days to prepare and submit their answers after the last chapter has been printed. The Pershing story will run approximately ten weeks. The exact date of the time limit for submitting answers will be announced later—contingent upon the closing date of the story.

RULE 2—The Pershing test is open to everyone except employees of the Pittsburgh Sun-Telegraph and their families.

RULE 3—A total sum of $3,000.00 in cash will be awarded as prizes—$500.00 to each of six classes or groups as follows:

CLASS NO. 1—Grade School Children.

CLASS NO. 2—High School Pupils.

CLASS NO. 3—College Students.

CLASS NO. 4—School Teachers, Members of the Faculty of Schools and Colleges, Clergymen, and Members of Religious Orders.

CLASS NO. 5—Members of the American Legion and Other Organizations That Include World War Veterans.

CLASS NO. 6—All Other Readers of the Pittsburgh Sun-Telegraph.

RULE 4—The prizes in each class will be awarded as follows:

FIRST PRIZE	$200.00
SECOND PRIZE	100.00
THIRD PRIZE	50.00
FOURTH PRIZE	25.00
FIFTH PRIZE	15.00
SIXTH TO TENTH PRIZES (INCL.) $10.00 EACH	$ 50.00
ELEVENTH TO TWENTY-SECOND PRIZES (INCL.) $5 EACH	60.00
TOTAL	$500.00
132 CASH PRIZES IN ALL, TOTALING	$3,000.00

In case of ties, contestants so tied will be awarded equal prizes.

RULE 5—The answers submitted in the Sun-Telegraph Pershing test will be examined by a special board of judges, none of whom will be employes of the Sun-Telegraph. The board of judges will make the awards and their judgment will be final. The sets of answers when submitted become the property of the Sun-Telegraph and will not be returned. All sets of answers submitted must be mailed first class postage prepaid and directed to the Pershing Contest Editor, Sun-Telegraph, Pittsburgh, Pa.

RULE 6—You do not have to buy a daily or Sunday Sun-Telegraph to participate in this contest. There is free access to the files of the Sun-Telegraph at the public libraries or at the publication offices of this newspaper.

The first three test questions appear in the Sun-Telegraph today

Keep House Plants From Out of Doors

Some writers have recommended setting house plants outdoors for a few hours if a warm day comes with rain. Don't do it! Plants that have been subject to the warmth of the house are likely to be seriously damaged and possibly killed by taking them from a warm room and exposing them to the chilly air and wind.

Winter Chicks Gain in Favor

By PROF. J. B. STONEBURN, Poultry Editor, Pittsburgh Sun-Telegraph

There is a growing tendency on the part of [illegible] poultrymen to increase the number of sources of farm income. Increasing numbers are using equipment which might otherwise be idle during the winter months to grow one or more broods of chicks on [illegible] broilers. [illegible] what effect these [illegible] quantities of winter-grown broilers will have upon the market. Greatly enlarged consumption is probable as the [illegible] One thing is sure however: if the grower is to [illegible] fair return he must adopt [illegible] calculated to [illegible] a superior article.

RATIONS ARE VITAL

The ration [illegible] will go far toward determining whether the enterprise will be a success or a failure. Growing chicks very definitely require many food elements and these, for satisfactory results, must be in correct proportions.

As I have so often stated in my personal opinion the chick producer [illegible] well to regularly use one of the high grade commercial feeds manufactured by a responsible feed concern of which there are many now serving the poultry [illegible]. If for any reason home-mixed feeds are preferred, then care should be taken to first obtain a thoroughly efficient formula, next to secure all the ingredients listed therein, see that they are all of suitable quality and finally mix them very thoroughly to the end that a perfect blend will be obtained.

If liquid milk is available give chicks all they will drink and omit the dried milk from the mash.

When chicks must be confined indoors or for any reason cannot be regularly exposed to direct sunshine add two and one-half quarts of cod liver oil to the 1,000 pounds of mash. Use oil which is guaranteed to contain the essential vitamin D.

PROPER DIET

Feed no scratch grain until the birds are seven to eight weeks of age. On the basis of the present grain market the scratch feed, when used, should contain one-half to [illegible] wheat.

After the chicks have learned to eat the mash and the danger of their filling up with indigestible material has passed, keep chick-size oyster shell before the brood constantly.

Feed both mash and grain in sanitary troughs so the ration may not be fouled with droppings.

Keep drinking vessels clean. Use a stiff brush and disinfectant to scour the dishes three times weekly.

Have enough hopper space to permit at least half of the brood to eat comfortably at one time.

The use of a dim light on chicks all night is desirable.

In the growing of winter broilers either in batteries or in pens during the season when the chicks cannot be let out of doors there is always danger that vices will develop in the flock, especially feather picking and cannibalism. These annoying troubles are really vices, are not due to nutritional deficiencies.

The vices referred to are almost sure to develop where the chicks are over-crowded.

Lice Do Damage To House Plants

Watch for plant lice on house plants, particularly on the new shoots; also look for scale insects. Spraying with a pyrethrum or nicotine spray will clear off the lice. Possibly pyrethrum will end the scale. Try using the spray three days in succession. Mix the material with water as directed on the packages.

PRESTO JUST LIKE MAGIC Nu-Life did it

Charges Batteries with Surprising Power Instantly

Marvelous New Battery Mixture puts surprising power in Batteries with Magic Speed instantly. Works by itself! No fuss or bother! Batteries recharge instantly. Hold their charge indefinitely. Doubles the life of batteries. Dead batteries charge themselves as if by magic, old batteries act like new. Can be used by anyone instantly. Read the discoverer's sensational FREE SAMPLE OFFER below. Most generous opportunity ever extended to motorists. Don't miss it!

At last science has discovered a new way to charge batteries with surprising power instantly. A magic new mixture gives batteries more power and pep. No more fuss and bother of changing batteries or having them recharged. No more costly batteries to buy. No more wrestling with the crank, in the blazing sun, pouring rain or freezing snow. No more danger of breaking an arm with a back-firing motor. This startling discovery takes the last vestige of uncertainty out of motoring and ends 90% of all battery troubles.

Works Automatically

This amazing product is called NU-LIFE and has been so successful that demonstrators and agents are simply coining money in easy generous commissions — up to $10 and $18 an hour! Some of the tests they have made are almost unbelievable. J. A. Bartlett tried Nu-Life in a battery that had been dead one year and it took a charge readily, and now works like new. J. Daniel Knox with many witnesses subjected Nu-Life to the most critical tests and they could scarcely believe their eyes, it worked so marvelously. After severe tests, E. E. Kunkle is opening up a Nu-Life battery station on his own property. Raymond Fox treated his battery and it works like new.

But NU-LIFE does more than make batteries charge instantly. It makes weak, discharged batteries unnecessary. It eliminates adding water so often, increases power and pep, doubles the life of batteries, eliminates freezing and overcharging, makes old batteries work like new. NU-LIFE keeps your battery, old or new, working to the best of its efficiency.

Using NU-LIFE is as simple as A B C. Only a few minutes are required to treat a battery and one treatment lasts forever. It is absolutely harmless. As a matter of fact, it preserves and lengthens the life of batteries. Not affected by extreme heat or cold. Does its work equally well in winter or summer whether the thermometer is 20 degress below zero or 100 degrees in the shade! Absolutely sensational!

Wonderful Money-Maker

No wonder every battery owner is vitally interested whether he drives a car or owns a Radio battery set.

No wonder demonstrators and spare-time workers report earnings as high as $9 in a few minutes. All you have to do is to show prospects how it charges batteries right up instantly, how you can save them the cost of new batteries, and how you can save them the trouble of run-down, weak, discharged batteries. Nine out of ten want to buy right away and the generous commissions we give will run your cash profits into the hundreds in no time!

FREE Sample Offer

And right now, Mr. H. S. Elliott offers to send you a FREE can of NU-LIFE at his own risk. You test it without cost. And better than that, he offers to pay you for testing NU-LIFE if you are not astonished and enthusiastic over results. Write him tonight for his sample offer and details of generous commissions to demonstrators. This unusual offer is limited to 30 days, so act at once. Clip the coupon now! Mail it today!

AGENTS $150 A WEEK!

NU-LIFE is so remarkable that it simply sells itself on demonstration. Agents and spare-time workers are making surprising profits. R. Rutcliffe writes, "The enclosed order speaks for itself but let me say, it simply sold itself to me." W. R. Pope says, "Nu-Life is the easiest and best seller I have ever seen. I can truly say I could have sold by this time 100 cans or more." Find out how easily you can get your share of these wonderful profits—$10.00 to $40.00 a day!

MEN—
IMMEDIATE EMPLOYMENT

THIS COMPANY WILL TAKE ON FIFTEEN ADDITIONAL MEN WHO NEED EMPLOYMENT AND WHO WISH TO LEARN IF THEY CAN DO SPECIALTY SALES WORK. THERE WILL BE NO CHARGE FOR EQUIPMENT AND NO DEPOSITS REQUIRED. WE WILL TRAIN ALL SUCH MEN FREE. THERE IS NO EXPENSE. THOSE WHO CAN QUALIFY CAN MAKE $150 TO $400 OR MORE DURING JANUARY.

Our requirements of you are that you be honest, of good reputation, active, alert, willing to learn and do the following things:

To learn (as taught) how to make a clear and convincing explanation of why you have called to see your prospect.

To learn (as taught) how to show the product so it will reveal the absolute need for it and the necessity of buying it.

To learn (as taught) how to persuade someone to do that which positively ought to be done.

To be honest in your own thought, so that you are entitled to confidence.

To work hard every day to make a genuine success in return for the privilege of a genuine opportunity in a permanent position with good people who will deeply interest themselves in helping you to get started and to get along.

This is a straightforward offer of sincere intent to worthy men who are in need of good substantial positions. Please do not apply for these positions unless you feel you can meet these requirements. Applicants will be personally interviewed Monday, 9 to 12 and 1 to 4.

FINANCIAL Local Securities MARKETS

STEADY GAINS IN LONE STAR AND WESTERN

Industrials Also Share In General Improvement Noted on Local Exchange

A substantial recovery in Lone Star Gas was the principal development on the Pittsburgh Stock Exchange during the week. The stock began to encounter strong demand early in the week at around the 25-level and moved up steadily with the volume of transactions expanding on the rise. No specific explanation of the advance was forthcoming; in fact, the street was not inclined to look for one, accepting the movement as a natural reaction from the recent weakness and an expected development in view of the marked improvement in the New York market. However, those in touch with Lone Star's affairs discussed the favorable aspect of the company's earnings for last year which are expected to show only a slight reduction from 1929 despite heavier charge-offs. Western Public Service followed the lead of Lone Star, but trading in that issue was comparatively light.

INDUSTRIALS GAIN

Industrial stocks shared in the general improvement here as well as in other markets. The week's changes in the active industrials on the local board ranged from large fractions to over 2 points, but it was noted that volume was considerably restricted. This fact was interpreted as favorable by the bullish traders who contend that there is relatively little stock available around current levels and any expansion of demand will result in some sharp spurts, especially among the better grade issues.

TRADING VOLUME LIGHT

Aside from the activity in the fuels, the week's market was a rather dull affair regardless of the stronger tone. The pace of the trading may be judged from the fact that total sales for the week amounted to 18,667 shares, involving 39 different issues and, of this total, more than 10,500 shares were accounted for by two stocks, Lone Star Gas and Western Public Service.

Refuses to Prevent Stockholders' Meet

BALTIMORE, Md., Jan. 24—(AP.)—An injunction to prevent the holding of a meeting here Monday of the stockholders of the Ward Baking Corporation, was denied today by Judge Samuel K. Dennis.

The injunction was asked in a suit earlier in the day. Yesterday, proceedings were instituted by two holders of preferred stock to bring about the removal of the president, chairman of the board and nine directors on the ground of mismanagement.

PRICE INDEX AGAIN LOWER

AUBURNDALE, Mass., Jan. 24.—(AP.)—Commodity prices during the week just closed recorded a sharp decline, says the McGill Commodity Service. The movement downward was due largely to the substantial break in chemical prices. This industry, which throughout 1930 showed considerable resistance against a declining trend, has recently been hit hard by keen competition, with the result that conditions today are little short of a price war. Hides and leather also dropped sharply, reaching a new low point in the critical readjustment which has been going on for practically a year.

The most important price changes for the week follow:

	This Week Jan 23, '31	Prev. Week Jan 16, '31	First of 1930 Jan 3, '30
All commodities	68.7	69.3	87.5
Agricultural	63.6	64.3	87.7
Chemicals	98.5	100.8	105.0
Hides and leather	76.8	78.0	112.1
Textiles, fine	62.2	60.7	90.8
Vegetable oils	66.6	67.3	91.9

Cottonseed Oil Market.

NEW YORK, Jan. 24.—Cottonseed oil was quiet today, but with the tone somewhat steadier. A little buying was stimulated by a further advance of ⅛c in Southern crude prices. In spite of the higher bids Texas mills still refused to sell and are believed to be well sold up. The upturn was checked by easiness in lard and cotton. Closing prices were 2 to 6 points net higher. Sales were 750 barrels. Prime crude, 6.37½; prime summer yellow spot and January, 7.25; March, 7.50; May, 7.63; July, 7.73.

COTTON CLOSES OFF 15 POINTS

NEW YORK, Jan. 24.—Recent advances were followed by reactions in cotton today under week-end realizing and Southern selling, which was attributed partly to hedging in March and May positions. Unfavorable labor reports from Lancashire and relatively easy Liverpool cables may have contributed to the decline, while the market showed signs of an easier technical position after the recent buying. May contracts eased off to 10.56, or 15 points net lower, and the market closed barely steady at net declines of 14 to 15 points.

The amount of cotton on shipboard awaiting clearance at the end of the week was estimated at 89,000 bales, against 125,000 last year.

PERSONALITIES MUCH DEFLATED BY DEPRESSION

Highly Press Agented Business Leaders' Worth Reappraised by Public

By MERRYLE S. RUKEYSER.
Universal Service.

NEW YORK, Jan. 24.—The real advantage of being a financial insider is that the position indicates whose figures to believe and whose to discount.

Mr. Rukeyser.

It is notorious that corporate financial documents—income accounts and balance sheets—are only statements of opinion. Some companies, desirous of unloading shares, habitually pad their figures covering profits and assets, whereas others under the guise of highly respectable conservatism regularly understate their earnings and assets. Scientific investors, like the Sun Life Assurance Company of Canada, look behind the published figures, and recompute authentic figures, on the basis of special information.

PERSONALITIES TOPPLE

The prolonged depression has not only reduced commodity and security prices, but has also deflated numerous personalities.

The public has reappraised the worth of highly press agented leaders whose utterances and business performance failed to stand up under the pressure of hard times.

But human nature changes slowly. Superficial observers ask what the public has permanently learned from the panic. It has temporarily learned to challenge glib statements and to assume an "I'm from Missouri" attitude toward allegedly big men.

Yet the public, in its present discriminating mood, is not wholly cynical. It is still willing to believe certain leaders, who seem worthy, on the basis of past performance, of full credibility.

BELIEVES BAKER

For example, it still takes at par the remarks of George F. Baker, 90-year-old head of the First National Bank of New York, as was shown late in the week. As the only surviving member of the ruling triumvirate of Wall street of the last generation which used to include the late J. Pierpont Morgan and James Stillman, Mr. Baker continues the old-fashioned tradition of taciturnity. But when on rare occasions he does speak, the public stops, looks and listens.

In the second interview of his long career, a statement consisting of 13 words, Mr. Baker turned the stock market upward on Thursday. His remarks, transmitted through his friend, Edward E. Loomis, president of the Lehigh Valley Railroad, confirmed the earlier report in this column that most influential people in Wall street were beginning to feel better about economic prospects. Mr. Baker was quoted as saying:

"There are some slight indications of improvement in business conditions along sound lines."

PRESTIGE HEIGHTENED

Recently, the financial public showed especial respect for the views on business prospects of other financiers—notably Paul M. Warburg, chairman of the Manhattan Company, and A. H. Wiggin, chairman of the governing board of the Chase National Bank. There are several others whose correctness through the last two turbulent years has heightened their prestige with the public.

One reason why Paul Warburg's remarks attracted world-wide interest was that he had clearly warned against the impending storm long before the panic broke, just as in 1919 he had cautioned against the current inflation. Seven and a half months before the panic of 1929, Mr. Warburg, in his annual report as chairman of the International Acceptance Bank, threw out the storm signals with unmistakable clarity.

On March 7, 1919, he said:

"If orgies of unrestrained speculation are permitted to spread too far, the ultimate collapse is certain not only to affect the speculators themselves, but also to bring about a general depression involving the entire country."

Sugar Market.

NEW YORK, Jan. 24.—Raw sugar was quiet today and prices were unchanged at 3.40c for spots, duty paid, with no sales reported.

Refined was unchanged with refiners quoting 4.70c and second hands available at around 4.65c. Business was light and confined to withdrawals against old contracts.

Reserve Governors See Better Business Feeling in Country

WASHINGTON, Jan. 24.—Federal Reserve Board governors who met here in the past few days are understood to have reported a slightly better business feeling in most sections of the country. This coincides with the board's summary of business conditions given out late Thursday, in which it found some improvement in production and employment in leading industries.

The board pointed out that there was an increase in output in the automobile industry, reflecting introduction of new models, and the activity in meat packing plants and at anthracite mines increased in December. As the automobile output increased the steel plants were more active.

GRAIN PRICES MOVE LOWER

CHICAGO, Jan. 24.—Oppressed by general expectance of increased arrivals of corn in the near future, grains suffered new all-around price breaks today. The season's bottomest quotations heretofore were outstripped both by corn and rye. Leadership on the bull side of every kind of cereals appeared lacking, and many traders said the low prices were without the appeal that would ordinarily develop if there were no government interference with business.

Corn closed nervous, ½@1¼ cents lower; wheat irregular, ⅜ off to ⅛ up; oats, ⅛@⅜ down, and provisions at 5 to 15 cents decline.

INDUSTRIALISTS SEE BEGINNING OF RECOVERY

Thousands Recalled to Work in Factories By Confident Leaders

By W. S. COUSINS

NEW YORK, Jan. 24.—Though the stock market has given no "advance notice" of an upturn in industry and trade, prominent industrial heads have confidently expressed the view that the bottom of the depression has been passed, and they are substantiating their view-point by recalling thousands of workmen back to the plants and factories.

After about 18 months of decline and depression in trade, falling commodity prices, agricultural depression and abnormal unemployment, signs are not lacking that the worst industrial upset the world has seen since 1875 has come to the end of its rope, and is now ready to give place to an era of gradual improvement.

Iron and steel manufacturing, with automobile production and kindred industrial, will, as usual, lead the way to business recovery, according to the most authentic signs on the financial horizon. It is hoped that the building industry will step in line, but the difficulty is that many sections of the country are still somewhat overbuilt, and will need to call a halt until the present spaces are occupied. The natural gas pipe lines are meanwhile taking up the slack of steel consumption formerly assigned to the building industry, and since the turn of the year steel production has been speeded up from around 30 per cent to 48 per cent of capacity. This is less than one-half capacity, but it represents a move in the right direction, and industrialists look for a further increase to 75 per cent of capacity by March 1.

The automobile industry has started operations on new models and is talking hopefully of improvement in the coming months. Stocks of cars are said to be about 25 per cent smaller than a year ago. Automobile registrations in this country as of January 1, 1931, showed the smallest gain over the previous year ever recorded. Total registrations at the beginning of 1931 amounted to 26,662,000 cars and trucks, an increase of only 0.6 per cent over the previous year. The total represents one motor vehicle to every 4.61 persons in 1930, as compared with one to every 4.58 in 1929 and to every 13.88 in 1919. The improved activity in motor car output last month was due in large part to the new model policy adopted by several producers who brought out their 1931 lines well in advance of the New York Automobile Show. The total production of automobiles in the United States and Canada was about 3,505,000 units in 1930, and estimates for the current year run from 4,000,000 to 4,500,000 cars.

TERMINAL COAL COMPLETES NEW WASHING PLANT

To Give Permanent Work To 1,000 Men in Operation In Mine at Coverdale.

By GEORGE H. SNYDER.

Pittsburgh Terminal Coal Corporation has completed its coal washing plant at Mine No. 8 at Coverdale, Pa., and will start full operations immediately. About 1,000 miners will be given steady employment at the property.

The plant is capable of washing and cleaning 4,500 tons of coal every eight hours and is one of the most modern installations of this type in the country.

The construction of the plant is in line with steps being taken by the larger coal operators in the major fields to produce an improved product to meet exact requirements of consumers. Washing makes possible the reduction of the content of ash in coal and also helps in controlling other important factors in coal analysis.

OTHER PLANTS BUILT

Within the past three years the Pittsburgh Coal Company, which has no connection with Pittsburgh Terminal Coal, has built four cleaning plants in this district.

An official inspection of the new plant at Coverdale was held yesterday. This was attended by representatives of the Powhatan Mining Company, the Pursglove Coal Mining Company, the Big Five Coal Company, the North American Coal Corporation and the Mutual Supply Company.

The members of the inspection party were later entertained at dinner at the William Penn Hotel by Samuel Pursglove, president of Pittsburgh Terminal Coal and an executive of the other companies represented.

BUILT BY PURSGLOVE

The plant was designed by Maj. Thomas M. Chance, of Philadelphia and was constructed by Heyl and Patterson, Inc., of Pittsburgh.

Joseph Pursglove, Jr., who is a mining engineer, had full charge of installing the new washer. He is the son of Joseph Pursglove, president of the Pursglove Coal Mining Company.

COPPER BUYING ACTIVITY DROPS

NEW YORK, Jan. 24.—Copper developed an easier tendency when foreign buying, which had been absorbing custom smelters' output, became less active late in the week. This development, combined with absence of domestic buying interest, was followed by the appearance of resale offerings at 9¾ cents in the domestic market, although producers and smelters were generally quoting 10 cents for electrolytic delivered in the Connecticut Valley. Buying interest is said to be limited owing to the general quietness of demand for finished products, with the exception of the recent improvement in the automotive industry.

Tin price fluctuations were erratic and the tone was easier toward the end of the week. Consumers were said to have refused to follow the steadier trend earlier in the week. Much confusion continued to exist as regards the proposal to curtail world production.

TORONTO, Ont., Jan. 24.—S. G. Blaylock, general manager of the Consolidated Mining and Smelting Company of Canada, Ltd., a subsidiary of the Canadian Pacific Railway, said he believes the prices of the metals "we are mostly concerned with have reached bottom and that there will be a gradual though slow recovery."

STOCKS SHOW RESISTANCE TO SELLING DRIVE

Market Closes With Loss Of Only Small Portion Of Its Precious Gains.

By BROADAN WALL
Universal Service.

NEW YORK, Jan. 24.—The stock market today had to absorb profit taking and renewed efforts by bears to unsettle prices. Notwithstanding these two sources, the market closed with the loss of only a small portion of its previous gains. There were several successful bear raids in individual issues, but the main body of stocks continued to show the same resistance to selling which was evident throughout the week.

A setback during the short session was entirely logical and in accordance with precedent, since the gains during the latter part of the week were fairly substantial in numerous instances, so that if nothing else a period of consolidation on the upside was fully warranted. Short covering was on a somewhat reduced scale and the market suffered from absence of buying from this source.

RAILS GAIN

Railroad stocks managed to close the day with a slight average gain. It was reported, however, that the dividend on Wabash "A" stock may be omitted by directors at their meeting Monday. Earnings of the road have been low for months but omission of the dividend would come as a surprise.

The weakest group were the tobacco stocks, with American Tobacco under particular attack by bears on rumors that the cigaret price war was about to be renewed. Friends of American Tobacco pointed out that this company has been recording record sales of its principal cigaret brand, and they also emphasized the fact that lowering of retail prices does not reduce the profit of manufacturers. Some nervous holders of American Tobacco undoubtedly sold the stock because of the company's announcement it will not continue to sell direct to the United Cigar Stores Company.

Reynolds Tobacco "B" sold off fractionally. Liggett & Myers sold off more than 2 points. Lorillard's earnings for 1930 are estimated to have equaled about a dollar a share. No important holdings of American Tobacco were liquidated on the weakness.

CORNER TURNED

Montgomery Ward reacted a point with the general list, but the buying of this stock on the setback was reported to be for well informed account. The company is stated to have turned the corner for the better in the final half of 1930. Steel common, American Can and American Telephone each reacted less than a point net. Auburn was again a star performer, achieving a new high on a 4-point run up, not all of which was retained to the close.

The public utilities declined with the industrial group. American Water Works lost a point on issuance of its December report showing a 10 per cent decline in power output. United Corporation sold off.

Allied Chemical sold off more than 5 points, while Eastman Kodak reacted a full point. Johns Manville, a favored issue recently, declined with the list. Chrysler enjoyed a spurt of strength. In many of the low-priced issues, pool activity was chiefly responsigle for the minor fluctuations.

Youngstown Steel Schedules Higher

NEW YORK, Jan. 24.—Steel mill operations in the Youngstown district will be increased next week 1 per cent to 49 per cent of capacity, Dow, Jones & Co. reports. Republic Steel activities will increase to 40 per cent compared with 37 per cent this week. Youngstown Sheet and Tube and Carnegie Steel Company will remain unchanged at 50 per cent.

THE WORLD NEEDS HOPE

Copyright, 1931, by N. Y. American, Inc., Great Britain. Rights Reserved.

"HAVING NO HOPE, AND WITHOUT GOD IN THE WORLD."

"I know that my redeemer liveth."
"In the flesh I shall see God."
"In my Father's house are many mansions."
"I go to prepare a place for you."

---and Faith and Hope are one.

Faith in God, hope of reward in a future life are necessary to human happiness. Hope springs eternal and will not die. It is the mainspring of all human effort.

And Faith brings consolation in all human sorrow.

This cartoon shows the most dismal of all human beings adrift in eternity, with cold atheism for a companion.

IN those words there is more comfort and hope than in all the arguments of all the philosophers—all the doubting, discussing and hairsplitting of agnostics and doubters.

Herbert Spencer, a mighty intellect, said as death approached: "My intellect forbids me to hope for anything but annihilation."

Millions that lack his genius are far happier than he was, for they can say: My FAITH gives me hope of happiness hereafter and consolation for the sorrow of this world. It makes me believe in God and his justice and mercy, which are everlasting.

"I cannot conceive or describe the mighty power that rules this universe. But I can and do believe in it, have faith and trust in it, and KNOW THAT ETERNAL JUSTICE NEVER FAILS. I know that 'annihilation,' the end of all hope and opportunity, is no part of eternal justice everlasting or of the divine kindness that blessed the poor and the meek."

"My days are swifter than a weaver's shuttle, and are spent without hope."
—Job, VII, 6.

Job had reached the lowest depth of despair when he gave up hope. He had even complained to his creator in language strange to us:

"Am I a sea, or a whale, that Thou settest a watch over me?"—Job, VII, 12.

To take hope from the soul is like taking the heart from the human body. All power is gone.

In this picture, Mr. Pace, the artist, has well portrayed atheism as a drifting iceberg, going slowly to destruction—cold, dull, cheerless. Alongside the cold iceberg the artist puts a ship bound for a safe haven.

Atheism is the belief of conceit—it has no genuine BELIEVERS. That is impossible, for its advocates arrogate to themselves more knowledge than was possessed by all those that have gone before them.

The EFFECTS of omnipotent power are all around them, but they will not admit the existence of a CAUSE.

Ask them, "Whence came the beginning?" and they will tell you, "There was no beginning." Point to the stars, as Napoleon did on his way to St. Helena, "Who made all that?" And they will reply, "Nobody made it all, it made itself. It just happened. It is the result of a fortuitous concourse of atoms."

The Government of Russia agrees with the so-called "thinker," who, being asked his opinion of God, said, "God? I have no need of that hypothesis." Russians seek to eradicate from the minds of millions, naturally deeply religious, all belief in God, all interest in a church or its activities, all hope, aspiration and faith outside the political doctrines of a few that have seized the national power.

They are mighty men, those Russians, accomplishing wonders. But they will find their power compared with that of religion in the heart of man as weak as a moth fighting against the current of Niagara.

The creators of a new "social order" based on contempt for religion forget what religion means. They forget that it has been developed in the minds and souls of men through millions of years of suffering, hardships, striving and aspiration. They forget that it is the hope of the unfortunate, the only consolation of those that suffer. They disregard their own political safety, forgetting that upon religion is based respect for law.

Those to whom atheism is preached, as a substitute for religion, will ask, "If there is no ruler in control of our universe, no ruler among the suns and planets, why should there be any among MEN?"

It is a natural question, and those upon whom atheism is forced will not fail to ask the question.

Religion is a necessary part of organized life. As there are written constitutions and books of law, so the world needs written religion.

Those that are experimenting with religious faith and everything else in Russia will come to realize that man cannot live by bread alone; he is not merely an animal body seeking food, shelter and clothing. Within him there is a mysterious longing, a belief in something far above and far away, upon which his soul and his future welfare depend.

The craving for belief and faith does not die. And the doctrines of Karl Marx cannot be successfully substituted for it, nor any teaching of material prosperity made to take its place.

Atheism is cold and stupid, for it is merely NEGATION, DENYING IN THE DARK, WITHOUT KNOWLEDGE.

In every direction proofs abound of creative force, justice and kindness.

The seasons return with their fruitfulness. The earth travels safely through millions of years in its spiral journey around the moving sun. The sun keeps its place safely among millions of other suns in our corner of the universe. We live with fires beneath our feet, fearful temperatures of thousands of degrees, and outside of the thin atmosphere above our heads is the "absolute zero," hundreds of degrees below freezing.

And man lives protected in space, the temperature of his blood at 98 degrees, never varying in health, whether he visits the burning equator or the Arctic regions.

There are ten million proofs of a "plan," of a power that directs and preserves.

There is no proof except dull self-conceit for a theory that everything happens accidentally, that there is no power above us, and that there is "nothing to hope for but annihilation," when these few years are past.

Men develop their religious systems as they do their political systems. You have tyranny and terror in savage government, and terror and cruelty in savage religions.

Primitive man makes God in his own image. It was truly said that if a camel had a god, its god would have four legs and a hump.

Men have attributed all their own weakness to their God. The pagans put on Mount Olympus gods and goddesses representing their own virtues and vices magnified.

Ancient religious writers imagined a god, vengeful, cruel, creating helpless human beings and then burning them alive forever and ever, inflicting such cruelty as no savage could imagine.

The ruler of the universe was portrayed as a "jealous god," visiting the sins of fathers upon the children unto the third and fourth generations.

Our own Puritan predecessors actually believed that the souls of the blessed, safely landed in heaven, were made more cheerful by looking down and seeing their friends and acquaintances roasting in hell.

All this is a part of human savagery—the weakness of imperfect human beings expressed in their conception of supreme power.

But religion and the deity are not bound or limited by such conception. The character and power of a father are not limited by the idea that his two-year-old child has of him.

The fact that man cannot conceive God as he is is no proof even for the most foolish that God does not exist.

A turtle by the railroad track cannot imagine an engineer directing the thundering train. But the engineer exists, and the inventive genius that created the locomotive, and passengers traveling to their destinations with a plan and a purpose, as we travel; passengers on this earth.

HUMAN BEINGS NEED FAITH—faith in their friends, in their families; faith between husbands and wives; faith in business, in government, in relations among nations, in everything that pertains to life on this earth.

Absence of faith is anarchy, absence of any fixed belief is a void, in which there can be no real progress.

In such times as these, when millions worry, many are in want, the most powerful men uncertain, bewildered, faith is especially necessary.

We know that things have gone wrong before now and that they have come right again. We need the belief that everything will come out right this time.

We need faith in our country, its resources, its power; faith in each other. Destruction of faith would mean quick return to savagery.

Above all, men need and must have for their comfort, safety and progress faith in one supreme justice and power, ruling the universe. They must have faith in the future, based upon performance in the past.

No man would be fool enough to suggest that a watch keeping exact time could possibly "make itself" or be the result of accident.

How can any be foolish enough to suggest that the infinitely complicated mechanism of this universe could by the remotest chance be the result of accident, or ruled by anything but eternal and unchanging law?

In addition to injuring himself, and making his life barren and his imagination sterile, the advocate of atheism is a public enemy.

He destroys the hopes of others, tears down, with his detestable preaching, that which cannot be rebuilt.

Take away the sight of a man's eyes and he may live usefully and happily, still able to hear with faith the lines, "I am the resurrection, and the life; he that believeth in Me, tho' he were dead, yet shall he live."

Take away the life and the light of thy soul, the faith that see immortality beyond death, and you take away all that is worth while and that would make this earth a floating iceberg of cold doubt.

The Stage and The Footlight Stars

COMEDY

DOROTHY APPLEBY and Raymond Guion demonstrate that actors do eat. The scene is in "Young Sinners," comedy by Elmer Harris, which opens an engagement in the Alvin, beginning Monday.

"Young Sinners" In Alvin; Nixon in Darkness Again

By GEORGE SEIBEL

AGAIN THE Nixon Theater is dark for a week, while "Young Sinners" trifle with the Decalogue in the Alvin. The title is typical of the craving for spice on the billboards. On a prominent corner of our staid and prim village a huge sign for a whole week advertised "Free Love," and when it was finally covered up the invitation was to see "Fast and Loose." Wordsworth wrote "Intimations of Immortality," but the modern theatrical producer prefers intimations of immorality.

"Young Sinners" are not as wicked, perhaps, as the title sounds. Many plays have exploited the perverse tendencies of the younger generation, which always was perverse. We have had "Bad Girl" to show Vina Delmar's idea of it and we had "Gypsy" to show Maxwell Anderson's idea of it and in the end we always learn that this wickedness is merely a sham. The author and his characters are only trying to forget that their mothers were Victorian.

Appropriate Setting

This is a comedy, which shows that Dramatist Elmer Harris does not take his sins very seriously. And the settings are appropriately laid in Palm Beach, Park Avenue and the Adirondacks, showing his appreciation of the fact that Sin is indigenous to Paradise.

Harris wrote "So Long Letty" and "The Great Necker," both which comedies had uproarious moments. "Young Sinners" has received much praise during its seven months in New York City, where they know their sins and sinners. So we are expecting to be amused and have little fear of being led astray.

"Sin is a monster of such frightful mien," the poet has told us, "as to be hated needs but to be seen." But the sinners in the play are not at all frightful, as a glance at the cast will show.

Some of the Sinners

Among the sinners are Muriel Belasco, a niece of the famous David, and Edith Shayne, who boasts that she has not a single relative in the theatrical business, though she has nine sisters and brothers.

These two ought to balance each other.

Virginia Lloyd also is a niece, her aunt being Alice Lloyd. But Patty Reynolds depends on aviation to get on in the world, when she isn't acting, for she has made three flights to the Pacific coast and back.

Raymond Guion, chief of the young sinners, started his stage career in "Mrs. Wiggs of the

Carroll's Calendar O.K., But New Show Gets Class B Rating

By GILBERT W. GABRIEL

(Universal Service Drama Critic)

NEW YORK, Jan. 24.

ONCE A YEAR, it seems, custom permits a drama critic to let down the bars of his righteousness and accept—provided they are sufficiently trivial—gifts of greetings from the more familiar producers. My desk overflows with colored cards, celluloid-covered blotting pads, an occasional Cremo Corona, and the best wishes of most of the major maestri of Broadway.

I am duly embarrassed and unwilling—but what can I do? It is fitting I should fly into such a rage as to suggest that my honor has been endangered by a nude corkscrew or a bottle of bootleg? Since these gentlemen feel that they must mistletoe the mark, I fear I must suffer and receive in silence.

Girls—All Dated

But there has just arrived one offering too splendid and estatic to merit an even tepid shoulder, one greeting which I feel it my grateful duty to help celebrate. I refer, of course, to that calendar from Carroll's "Vanities" office, a silver-papered, 12-page ornament, with a girl-of-the-month voluptuously chromoed upon each and every page, and the whole emblazoned with the modest legend, "Earl Carroll's Year of Beauty."

They've got to put on more plays to keep the critics' tastes down. Otherwise we'll be going to entertainments like "You Said It" and expecting to hear "Iolanthe" or "Aida." It was so long since I was supposed to forgive.

Speed, But No Wag

"You Said It" is a college-brand song-and-dance comedy of the "Good News" sort. Which means that, when it peels its sweaters and gets down to shaking its so-forths, it has speed. That's pretty nearly all it has. That and a young, thin, platinum-bobbed Polish girl named Lyda Roberti, who runs away with it and us and everything.

Lou Holtz is the wag-in-chief. Since Mr. Holtz is also one of the producers of "You Said It," I can appreciate why he did more worrying than wagging. The cast also contains Mary Lawlor and a manly young smiler from the movies, Stanley Smith, and there are one or two good, swinging songs by Arlen and Jack Yellen, the other producer, and that's all that I could possibly approve of in Kenton College, in Forty-sixth street at the Messrs. Chanin's Theater.

This time it is not athletics, but another

Movie-Go-Round

BY LOUELLA O. PARSONS

Universal Service.

HOLLYWOOD, Jan. 24.—Great happenings in Hollywood! "Trader Horn" opened in a blaze of glory Thursday night. The new Gumbiner house, to be called the Los Angeles Theater, is being rapidly put into shape. It has every convenience and is said to be the last word in construction, in modern requisites and in arrangement. Charlie Chaplin's picture, "City Lights," opens there January 31, and it's to be a social event such as Los Angeles has seldom seen. Then there is "Once in a Lifetime." Moss Hart is one nice boy, even if he did burlesque the movie folk, and Sid Grauman is so popular that if he ran for president, Mr. Hoover would have to resign. So it's safe to say everyone will be there. Yep, I'm going, even if Moss and George Kaufman did put me in their show. Then there is "Little Caesar," opening January 29. Mervyn Le Roy is that nervous over his picture and over the premiere Warner Brothers are staging.

When two people lunch almost daily we usually feel there must be a romance in the background, and how Hollywood does go after the rumored heart attacks. Petite, blonde, were gromed and decidedly attractive, Lady Inverclyde, known on the English stage as June, lunches every day or nearly every day at the embassy with Lothar Mendes, former husband of Dorothy Mackaill. Usually they are alone, too. Well, maybe it's only an exchange of ideas, but they both have the attitude of being terribly interested in each other.

Several Promising Plays Among Future Bookings

By WILLIAM J. LEWIS

THE NIXON HAS FOUR open dates this week. It would have six but for the fact that Wednesday and Friday are set aside for the Adler family, popular Yiddish troupers, who will present "The Stranger" and "Without a Home," respectively, on the evenings stated.

With the passing of the week things will brighten up for the Nixon, which has "Subway Express" booked for the week of February 2. This will be followed by Otis Skinner, week of February 9, in "Marius," a play by Marcel Pagnol, who wrote "Topaze."

To the Alvin the first week in February will bring George White's "Scandals," featuring Bert Lahr, Oscar Shaw and Grace Brinkley. On the ninth of Valentine month the Alvin curtain will raise on "Death Takes a Holiday," a comedy of last season in New York. Philip Merivale will be seen in it in the role he created.

Then Comes March

These do not exhaust the interest about future productions. It has been learned that "A Wonderful Night" is scheduled for the Alvin along about St. Patrick's eve. This is an English version of the Johann Strauss operetta, "Die Fledermaus," the presentation of which calls for a revolving stage, providing for continuous action.

The situation in the Nixon, the second dark week in what should be the height of the season, is a reflection of a general one. There seems to be not enough shows to go around. Probably because there are not enough towns for shows to go around to. The Theater Guild company that played "The Apple Cart" here earlier in the season has ended its tour—16 weeks in cities that now comprise the road. Formerly a tour was 40 weeks, including many one-night and two-night stands, meaning that a touring company would visit many more than 40 towns in that many weeks.

Wherein We Excel

On concluding the jaunt of "The Apple Cart," Tom Powers, who played King Magnus in that Shaw satire, stated that we of what Gotham calls the sticks "got it" better than New York did.

"Why is this?" he said. "Well, I think it is because the audiences outside New York come to a Shaw play with fewer preconceptions and preoccupations than do New Yorkers. They

The Screen and Its Players

Lawrence Tibbett Returns Again in Singing Romance

By MILDRED FILLMORE

LAWRENCE TIBBETT and Grace Moore, stars of the concert hall as well as of the theater, appear together for the first time in the musical-talk picture, "New Moon." It is a version of the Mandel and Schwab success. It is romance laid against a Russian background.

Adolphe Menjou, suave boulevardier of the movies, has a prominent role. Roland Young also is in the cast. The film was directed by Jack Conway.

"Hook, Line and Sinker," the latest comedy to co-star those "Cuckoo" boys, Bert Wheeler and Robert Woolsey, is the Stanley feature. They appear as a couple high-powered insurance salesmen, who decide they are going into the hotel business when they meet a pretty girl who is sole owner of a hotel. Dorothy Lee portrays the girl. Ralf Harolde and Natalie Moorhead, both former Pittsburghers, are in the cast.

She Wants a Man!

"Oh, For a Man" is the Aldine feature. It presents the story of a prima donna with fame and fortune in her grasp, who falls in love with an egotistical burglar and discovers that he is necessary to her happiness and career.

Jeannette MacDonald portrays the lady and Reginald Denny steps out as the burglar. Others in the cast include Marjorie White, Warren Hymer, Allison Skipworth, Albert Conti, Bela Lugosi, Andre Cheron and William Davidson.

Dorothy Mackaill, who hasn't been around our town since she appeared as the Office Wife, is with us again. This time she is in the Davis and in the Enright in a picture "Once a Sinner."

And So They Marry

The story is all about a girl, who is one of the lilies of the field. She toils not at all and she doesn't spin either. Finally, she falls in love with a young man and they get married. Then the fellow develops a jealous streak. The cast includes Joel McCrea, John Halliday and Ilka Chase.

Clara Bow is being seen on the Fulton and Sheridan Square screens in a picture "No Limit." She's a heroine who becomes accidental owner of a gambling house, is mixed up with a crook gang, goes to jail and is saved by the man who loves her.

The cast also includes Norman Foster, Harry Green, Stuart Erwin and Dixie Lee.

Some Prison Drama

"The Criminal Code," film version of the New York stage success of a season ago, is being held over in the Warner. It is a dramatic story of prison life, depicting the changes in the character in a boy, sent to jail

CLARA BOW is starred in "No Limit," screen feature in the Fulton and Sheridan Square.

ROMANCE

GRACE MOORE and Lawrence Tibbett, both from the operatic stage, are featured in "New Moon," Penn film.

Miss Tobin Eats Anything She Likes, and Gets Along

By JERRY HOFFMAN,

Universal Service.

HOLLYWOOD, Jan. 24.

I GAZED horror-stricken at the ease with which Genevieve Tobin disposed of a lobster salad and thought nothing of having ice cream for dessert. Pictures of other young film players who pecked daintily at toast and tea for lunch flashed into my mind. Evidently Miss Tobin penetrated my thoughts, for she smiled and said:

"There are so many other ways for a woman to keep physically fit without diet. I just eat anything I want to whenever I like."

There seems to be good sense in that remark. There is lots of good sense in Genevieve Tobin. Nothing remarkable in that, except that golden-haired girls with wide blue eyes aren't supposed to be sensible.

From Legitimate

She is a musical comedy type with a legitimate background. Vaguely I recalled "The Age of Reason," which two little tots, Genevieve and Vivian Tobin, played in vaudeville some years ago. I mentioned it.

"And you look very young," she sighed. Really, Genevieve is very nice.

When she was old enough to put on long dresses, or—rather, at that period, short ones, Genevieve Tobin made her bow to the dramatic stage with Wilton Lackaye in "Palmy Days." Only two musical comedies have been included in her career since, "Dear Sir," and "Fifty Million Frenchmen." It was "Polly Preferred" that focussed the spotlight on her in 1921, and London retained her for more than a year in "The Trial of Mary Dugan." She still gets fan mail from England addressed to Mary Dugan. "Free Love" is her second picture.

Acquires Broad "A"

Apropos her England appearances, she was chided "for speaking with the broad "a" on her arrival in Hollywood. We hollywoodians are prone to belittle anything from the legitimate stage. However, Genevieve dismissed it simply:

"Why spend years learning to speak English properly," she replied, "and then discard your education because a few will think it affectation?"

That, and her little remark anent food, indicate that Genevieve is a postive young lady. She is—but in a manner that adds to her personality rather than detracting. I still have an inborn terror of attractive girls given to the usage of a broad "a." As far as Genevieve Tobin is concerned, she can even drop her "h's." It is oke with me.

Chaplin Sad But Funny in New Picture

By LOUELLA O. PARSONS

Motion Picture Editor, Universal Service.

LOS ANGELES, Jan 24.

YOU FORGET how intellectually stimulating Charlie Chaplin is when you don't see him often. He is always surprising to me and I venture to say I know him as well as, or perhaps better, than most movie writers. Charlie has a sweetness, a keenness and a charm—a charm that makes it possible for him to remain two and a half years away from the screen and still hold the great god public in the hollow of his hand.

A keenness, not in making financial deals but in refusing to release a picture until he is certain himself it is as good as he or any other motion picture actor can make it.

Expense Is Great

He has spent over $1,500,000 on "City Lights," and it has taken him two and a half years to complete it. In spite of the clamor for sound pictures he has remained true to his conviction that perfect pantomime is only possible without conversation.

"City Lights" is the only silent picture that has been completed within the last year. Its sole sound is the orchestration, composed by Mr. Chaplin himself—and he has changed the musical score so often it has cost him many thousands of dollars just to put in this extraneous synchronization.

Chains Bid for It

I had heard of Charlie Chaplin's amazing plan to take over auditoriums seating from 3,000 to 4,000 in the key cities and show his "City Lights" at popular prices, or even cheaper, if he does not release it through regular channels. I had heard also, that several theater chains were bidding for the rights and Charlie was undecided whether to accept their offer or release his own picture.

Can't you see the money rolling in if he decides to rent these huge auditoriums like the Metropolitan Opera House, and show his picture, say at 25 cents.

But Charley is not making up his mind in a hurry. Why should he with three important theatrical circuits waiting to get this prize of the year, "City Lights"?

Wants All to See

He was loth to discuss this plan which had been given to me from an outside source, but he did say that he wanted all the people to see "City Lights."

"I personally rented the George M. Cohan Theater in New York," he told me. "The first night I am charging $10 because the people who patronize these premieres can afford to pay that amount. After the opening night we are running a

Players in Africa Risk Jungle Fever and Savages

By MARQUIS BUSBY.

Universal Service.

HOLLYWOOD, Jan. 24.

"AFRICA MAY BE the land of strange romance, but it's no place for a white man."

Harry Carey

Harry Carey will tell you that, and Harry Carey should know. He spent seven months in the darkest part of the Dark Continent during the filming of "Trader Horn."

That intrepid company which set out from the M-G-M Studio traveled 14,000 miles through uncharted jungles and across mighty rivers and falls. Eleven times they crossed the equator. They slept in tents, a handful of white people in the midst of hundreds of natives.

Nice Sharp Teeth

Many of those natives had filed teeth, an alarming indication of cannibalistic tendencies. Three white women traveled those many weary miles, Edwina Booth, Mrs. Harry Carey and a script girl. Practically every white person in the troupe suffered at one time or another with jungle fever. Carey escaped, and he never once used that infallible remedy of the swamps, quinine.

"I bought some pills at a trading post," he explained. "It was a remedy known for years to European traders. They called them esonophelee, and the esonophelee is the mosquito which carries the fever germ."

Now Speaks Native

Carey, at least, combined a few pleasures with the arduous work of that trek across Africa. He learned the inter-tribal language, Swahili. Through that he brings back to America a fund of jungle lore.

Carey is not sure what his future plans will be. He became famous in westerns, and now horse operas are a minus quantity around Hollywood. He expects to leave for New York shortly, and while he is there he will pay a visit to his old schoolmate, Jimmy Walker, mayor of Bagdad-on-Subway. They were in law school together.

He hopes that westerns will return to favor. He's as much at home in a saddle as you are in your favorite fireside chair. Then, too, the showing of "Trader Horn" may mean great things to him. After all, he plays the name role.

'Heigh-Ho,' Hollywood

By REGINA CREWE

Motion Picture Editor, New York American.

NEW YORK, Jan. 24.

HEIGH-HO, HOLLYWOOD, you gave Broadway a dull week, pictorially speaking. And it wasn't helped any by the arrival of George Bernard Shaw's "How He Lied to Her Husband," which, in British film form, proved light and airy as a Yorkshire pudding.

The only excitement was provided by "Little Caesar." With a take of $30,000 over its second week-end, the Mervyn Leroy photoplay seems a cinch to keep right on breaking records. The only one of the current attractions to run a second week was "Reducing," which continues in the Capitol. Marie Dressler is credited with much of the picture's magnetism.

Ready for Premiere

One can't go out these days without stumbling over some of the "Cimarron" crowd. Director Wesley Ruggles, Cameraman Eddie Cronjager, Richard Dix, the star; Bill Le Baron, the producer—they're all in town for Monday night's premiere. From a preview glimpse, the film looks as big as Hy Daab talks. Howard Estabrook's dialogue makes it sound as well as it appears.

The Warners seem to think that $2 pictures are passe. "They've changed their Broad-

Tito Schipa Opens Week' In Recital

By J. FRED LISSFELT

TITO SCHIPA, tenor from the Chicago Opera Company, who will sing an important role when the company plays for us in the near future, opens the week's music with a recital Monday night. Schipa is one of the most intelligent musicians among contemporary Italian singers and an excellent vocalist. To be sure his forte is the opera, and he will sing four varied and characteristic arias, each typifying a definite school of opera.

The "Don Juan" air will go well in concert. It was inserted artificially after all, and never has sounded plausible in the drama. The music is a test piece with all the florotura for the tenor that Mozart reserved for sopranos. The song from "L'Elisor d'Amore" was a favorite with Caruso and one of Donizetti's most fluent melodies.

Idyll From Goethe

The scene from "Werther" is little known in America owing to the neglect of our producers for this beautiful idyll of Goethe. The "Martha" air always gets a cheer. It belongs to the music halls and abounds in high notes. Schipa has not overlooked some fine Italian songs and his accompanist will play some Spanish music.

Gaylord Yost will appear in violin recital Wednesday evening in Hotel Schenley. Yost, though not Pittsburgh-born, has been so closely associated with a high type of music for so many years in our city that we are likely to overlook what he has brought us. As organizer and first violinist of the Yost String Quartet, he has offered us programs which have ransacked the classics for every worth-while quartet and quintet, and he has sought steadfastly for novelties which we should hear to keep abreast of the times.

Concerts Popular

His concerts have attracted a most congenial coterie of amateurs and professionals, and the afternoons in the Schenley are rendezvous for the exchange of many pleasant musical experiences.

As teacher he has been active also, and now he appears as solo violinist and composer, closing his program with his own "Concertino." A sonata of Sammartini and Albert Spalding's book of "Etchings" are included.

The Pittsburgh Orchestra plays again next Sunday.

MARY DORAN and Walter Huston in "The Criminal Code," film version of the dramatic stage play, showing in Warner.

and Lothar has always preferred English girls.

Few people know that Jack Barrymore has a yearning to play George Washington. He did a one-act skit one time and his makeup was so good and the lines of the aquiline nose so true to Washington's profile, that Jack was delighted with himself. That's why it is the general opinion that he will try to coax Warners to loan him for the educational epic. Jack would enjoy the knee breeches, powdered wig and silver buckles. I cannot, however, see Belle Bennett as Martha Custis. She is too emotional and not reserved enough.

The all-star cast in "Women Like Men" are earning their money, believe you me. Lilyan Tashman's sister, hearing that Lilyan and Evelyn Brent had to be in the front line in a pouring rain, went out and sought some woollen underwear that is so scarce in California it is a curiosity. It must have given her some satisfaction to know that both the girls wore it. They are now working at night. It may be all right to have a manless picture and women taking the part originally intended for men, but most of the girls are glad that the picture will soon be finished.

Are Warner Brothers contemplating a break with the Hays organization? I don't enjoy rumoring things of this kind, but it's the general opinion along Hollywood boulevard that the Warners are preparing to break loose from the Hays organization, else why would they make such inroads into the Paramount talent? One story is that Al Jolson was taken away from them, also Howard Hawks, director, so they felt what was fair for one was fair for all. Certainly, with Ruth Chatterton and William Powell and Kay Francis already signed and Marlene Dietrich and George Bancroft strongly considered—well, it looks as if Paramount would have to go out and get some new faces and build some new personalities. Warners' line-up is beginning to look like a Who's Who in Filmland. Only Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer can compete with the star personnel in this list.

Somewhere there must be some little boy who is 50 inches tall and six or seven years old who could play the part of "Sooky," Skippy's pal. Paramount has had innumerable tests made of youngsters only to find they were too tall, too wide or too unintelligent. Jackie Searle, who plays Skippy, has been waiting patiently for his sidekick in the picture. Mitzi Green is the feminine interest and any youngster who works with Mitzi and Jackie has to be clever, for he is not associated with conventional children with ordinary minds.

continuous show for the same price that the other movie houses charge for program pictures.

"We are going through a period of depression," he said. "Men who formerly had fortunes are poor. I want everyone to see 'City Lights' because I honestly believe it is the best picture I have ever made. I purposely set the admission fee in New York City at popular prices."

To See Opening

Charlie is going to New York to be present at the opening of "City Lights." He has put the opening date one week after the Los Angeles premiere at the fine new Gumbiner house called the Los Angeles Theater.

In Los Angeles, Albert Einstein, great scientific genius, will be Charlie's guest of honor. Einstein has accepted and he probably has as high a regard for the little man who has made more people laugh and cry than any other actor on the stage or screen in the world as Charlie has for him.

An amazing friendship has sprung up between Einstein and Chaplin; the German professor, who has universities begging for the honor of bestowing degrees upon him, and the Englishman, who has made screen comedy an art.

"Tell me about 'City Lights,'" I begged.

Sad and Funny

"It's sad," Charlie confessed, with an apologetic smile. "You will cry, but it is also funny. I suppose I should say it's not so good, but I honestly believe it's the best picture I ever made. I go into beautiful homes, I meet cultured, educated people, but I am still the funny figure that the world knows because my dress clothes do not fit me. They are borrowed."

If it's the best picture Charlie ever made, all of Hollywood better look to its laurels. I have known Charlie for 15 years or more and I have never known him to make a bad picture. My first acquaintance with him began when he signed with Mutual and the Chicago Herald sent me to interview him. We did the story in the barber shop of the La Salle Hotel in Chicago while Charlie was getting a manicure. I rated a front page story from a city editor who was famous for his proneness to tear up stories that didn't appeal to his personal ideas.

I fell for Charlie that time because my front page story got me a raise in salary and I have liked him ever since because I know he is a friend upon whom I can always count.

New Picture By Jannings

Emil Jannings, German actor, who has been acclaimed again and again by the press here and abroad as one of the finest actors on the screen, has been signed again to a contract by Paramount, for whom he worked in American-made films back in silent days.

He will appear shortly in a picture called "The Man I Killed," from the play by Maurice Rostand. The film will be made at the Paramount New York studio, under the direction of Ernst Lubitsch, under whom Jannings achieved some of his most notable triumphs, beginning with "Passion." In the cast also will be Phillips Holmes.

New Picture For Marion

Marion Davies has begun work on her new Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer starring film, "It's a Wise Child." Robert Z. Leonard is directing this film, which is an adaptation of Laurence E. Johnson's stage success of the same name. Among the players selected in support of Miss Davies are Lester Vail, Kent Douglass, Robert McWade, Johnny Arthur and Clara Blandick. Miss Davies' last vehicle was "The Bachelor Father."

come as Shaw wants them to come—with open minds eager for entertainment. I think it is a mistake to regard Shaw the dramatist as primarily a deep philosopher. He is a showman; he arranges his surprises and his tricks of repartee so that they get a 'sure-fire' effect.

"In New York, part of the audience—the sophisticated part—comes to the plays with preconceptions as to Shaw's philosophy. Some of them insist that you must read a Shaw play before seeing it. If they do this—or even if they don't—they expect the play to live up to their notion of it.

"In the cities outside New York we found a greater sense of leisure, a keener intellectual curiosity, a greater eagerness to be amused. And that is why people there enjoyed and understood Shaw better than in New York."

Gets College Cheer

The young thin platinum-bobbed Polish girl named Lyda Roberti, above-mentioned, is so I hear, a newcomer to Broadway. I see she is the daughter of a celebrated European clown and that she is also an expert bareback rider and circus aerialist. Be that as it may, she has a good deal of pep and a pretty Polish accent which cover a multitude of synthetics, and the first night's audience gave her the college cheer.

A grade-B show all around, equipped with the usual fat boy, raccoon coats, shrill soubrets and solemn glee-clubs which spell varsity in letters of footlights. And lots of lung power and ankle-agility and a dumb-rum libretto. You may like it better than I did. You'll just have to laugh at Lou Holtz more than I could.

But just the same United Artists is selling tickets for the Chaplin picture at $11 just a few blocks down Lit-up Lane.

Folks Just Will Talk

They buzz here that Emil Jannings, due in town the latter part of March, may appear in a stage play. Also that Maurice Chevalier is going to make a local bow in vaudeville. But you know how people talk.

Lights on the Hippodrome marquee advertise "The Man Who Came Back"—Primo Carnera! In person he is sharing honors with Charlie and Janet. Incidentally, the two kids wowed 'em at the Brooklyn Fox Theater, $25,000 in three days.

A stop-press item from the Warners says that John Barrymore has the only privately owned dinosaur egg in captivity. Dinosaur eggs are the largest known. The notice doesn't say whether or not our John laid it himself.

Helen Twelvetrees has waved adieu. Edward G. Robinson has left us forlorn.

Names Is Names

"Resurrection" has been retained as a title for the Roxy showing of the Lupe Velez-John Boles talkie. But good old "East Lynne" is "Exflame" at the uptown Beacon Theater.

A local news sheet is staging a voting contest among its readers to determine sentiment regarding Clara Bow's retention in pictures. And "Reed" Kann, editor of Motion Picture Daily, asks editorially "What of 'It'"? He says the public is weary of "It," exhibitors are no longer hot about "It" and that "It" is dynamite for the industry. And plaintively queries, "What's going to be done about 'It'?"

through an unfortunate chain of circumstances.

Phillips Holmes, who first flashed prominently across the screen as the wheat-farmer Romeo in "The Devil's Holiday," is cast as the boy. Walter Huston, who did master work in the title role of "Abraham Lincoln," has the leading role in "The Criminal Code." He is seen as a district attorney, later made prison warden.

"The Lion and the Lamb," based on E. Phillip Oppenheim's story, is the new picture in the Harris.

Gary Cooper and Marlene Dietrich have the leading roles in "Morocco," which is the Garden booking.

Nancy Gets Trip South

Nancy Carroll is in Palm Beach for a short vacation after completing her role in "Stolen Heaven," the production in which she has the stellar part and which was made at the Paramount New York studio. Shortly she will go to work again in "Up Pops the Devil," the picture version of the current play which Edmund Goulding will direct at the Eastern studio. Frederic Marsh and Charlie Ruggles are to be the male leading players in the cast.

Playhouse Has Comedy

"Credentials," a modern satirical three-act comedy of Russia by Nicholas Evreinov, will be presented Tuesday and Wednesday evenings under the direction of Boris S. Glagolin at the Y. M. & W. H. A., [illegible] avenue. This play was produced by Mr. Glagolin ... has been produced in America only once before ... by the Princetown Players under the direction of Mr. Glagolin.

Dixon, Daughter In Academy Bill

Headed by the character actor Harry Dixon and his daughter, Lillian Dixon, ... and comedy, Bar Revue opens at the Academy Sunday night with a ... show. Other entertainers are Olga Petrova, Bill Moran, Jack Kelly, Toni Brown and Charlie Cole.

TITO SCHIPA, lyric tenor, will give a concert in Syria Mosque Monday evening, January 26.

Says Actors Make Plays

Her 47 years on the stage have convinced Henrietta Crosman, known and loved by two generations of theatergoers, that actors make shows.

"They say that 'The play's the thing,'" Miss Crosman explained, "but that's only half of what Shakespeare had Hamlet say. Hamlet was explaining that the play was the thing with which to 'catch the conscience of the King.' He wasn't laying down theatrical commandments. Players make or mar the play."

Miss Crosman, who denies that she belongs to the "old school" of acting, believes there are as many good actors today as there ever were.

The Saga of Rufftown

By ARTHUR "Bugs" BAER

Ruff, at 92, Sore 'Cause His Papa Insisted He Go to School

YOU ALL REMEMBER the story of the laziest bum-mister in the world. He was sleeping on schedule on the top floor of a hotel when the joint took fire. Somebody had mixed a rum omelet with the wrong kind of eggs.

A bellboy nudged the unconscious pedestrian with an eight-pound sledge hammer.

The guy only woke up on one side. That's how lazy he was.

"Hotel's on fire!" yelluxed the bellboy.

The hokey leaned out put one hand on the floor and then went back to sleep.

All he said was: "Call me when the floor gets hot."

Well, that sleeper was The Glutt. The bellboy was Bumpty Oats. And the man who owned the hotel and started the fire was Old Man Ruff.

He was sore because at the age of 92 his papa had insisted on him going back to school.

He went around looking for Agra Zarraipper, the 156-year-old Turk. He blurped:

"When I get through with that miserable faker I'm going to make him call himself Junior."

It was a tough fight.

At the finish Old Man Ruff was as battered as the deck load of the Hesperus.

Was he discouraged? Can an oyster fry in butter?

Can a beetle find a pin?

Was Old Man Ruff worried and disheartened? You never heard of a bootlegger walking south toward Canada did you?

Old Man Ruff loosened his hold on eleven policemen, which enabled him to walk with one hand free.

"Bring on that old Turk, Dempsey and Tunney," he roar-burred, "and I'll go through them like gravy through a beard."

The Old Turk was as agreeable as a ten per cent discount for cash.

That's when Old Man Ruff set fire to his own hotel, the famous Ruff House, terms in advance, weather extra, not responsible for the string on bundles and two kinds of gasoline, engine and cooking.

He was polishing his own nails when his thumb exploded.

He collected six million dollars insurance from the Society for the Prevention of Misinformation on Tombstones and another couple million from the man who snubbed the alphabet.

Detectives trailed Old Man Ruff for months. They finally discovered the secret of his longevity. He was a Democrat and had cornered the formula of suspended animation for eight years at a clip.

Stale Annie loved The Glutt with a fervor that would barbecue a hippopotamus at 60 yards.

But The Glutt was matched to fight Unkus the Bopp for the benefit of everybody except the people who bought tickets to see it.

The Glutt was taking a beating that would have softened up both sides of the Grand Canyon.

The referee wasn't there to praise Caesar, but as State coroner he would get two dollars for the other job.

The referee slugged Unkus the Bopp who bopped The Glutt in turn and The Glutt with tears in his eyes leaned through the ropes and said to Stale Annie:

"Are you sure you love me?"

"Love you? Sure?" quobbered Annie. "I'm more than sure. I'm so certain that I love you that I can't bear to see you kicked around like soap in a bathtub. That's why I'm wearing smoked glasses."

And Annie climbed into the ring and slammed The Glutt with a subscription for House and Garden magazine.

"Fights off," wheedled the referee. "No coaching from the sidelines. I'll fight anybody in the world in my country but you got to pay the railroad fare, there and back. This city is being run crooked and the mayor is no exception to the misrule.

"If I beat this rap on burglary, arson and homicide, I'm going to run for mayor on the reform ticket."

The thrilling fight was declared a draw by a jury of somnolent weed benders and The Glutt said:

"I didn't mind being knocked out by Unkus the Bopp. But he insulted me. He said: While you're down there, tie my shoelaces, will ya?"

And after that, The Glutt wouldn't fight a man unless he wore button shoes or Congressional gaiters with rubber in the sides.

(The Saga of Rufftown is being filmed by the Cracked Lens News Service for distribution in abandoned quarries and flooded coal mines. If you have an old cellar that ain't working, we will give you the Australian rights and you will become a rich man if Henry Ford adopts you. Don't miss any of these instalments, because the synopsis is as jerky as a calf tied to the back of a wagon. Signed, the author, bless his little heart.)

So Shavings Shattered Shutters

A Policy Racket

By MILT GROSS

A Letter in Violet Ink Sells Mister Doohickey on Insurance

SHOULD MR. DOOHICKEY ever stick a cigar into his face, it mattered not when or where or how suddenly he did it, Mr. Splints would materialize from out of the ether at once, grinning and with a lighted match ready.

Should Mister Doohickey be about to 'phone from a booth—any booth—and only have dimes it was a sure bet that Mr. Splints was bound to rise up out of the nearest cuspidor, bowing and smiling and proffering two nickles.

For you see Mr. Splints was an Insurance agent and Mr. Doohickey was a Prospect.

BUT to all Mr. Splints' wiles and begging and cajoling and threatening and importuning and warning Mr. Doohickey had but one answer.

"Insurance? I want it but my wife don't want it!!!"

Mr. Splints' associates at the office would say to him:

"Bah, what do you keep after that guy for—he's a lemon!"

To which Mr. Splints would reply:

"Gentlemen, the Cold Canvas Campaign! Never let up on a suck—I mean prospect. Keep after 'em. You'll get 'em! I'll get Doohickey yet!"

THEN ONE DAY, among other mail, there arrived for old Doohickey a letter that had nothing to do with insurance, marked personal, in violet ink and it didn't grate on Mr. Doohickey's olfactory nerves either.

He should have burned it. He didn't burn it. His wife found it. Then the fun began.

Vainly between the scratches, kicks and bites did Mr. Doohickey try to sell her the idea that the signature "Snookums" was just the cable address of a solid old substantial firm of linen importers.

Mrs. Doohickey just turned the radio on louder to drown out the screams and selected a nice new potato scalloper.

Doohickey, once debonair, now a total ruin, crawled painfully forth to bribe the neighborhood kids to tell Mrs. Doohickey that their mommas wanted to borrow her rolling pin, meat chopper and other heavy artillery.

YET all this seemed like blissfully floating on a perfumed cloud in a golden summer sunset compared to the "Hellevision" brought into the Home that followed during what Mrs. Doohickey chose to call her period of Suffering in Silence.

Then one day Doohickey said:

"Burnt you up a bit, that letter, didn't it, dear?"

"You should ask, you beast," wailed Mrs. Doohickey.

"Well," he inquired, "why the heck don't you leave me?"

"Ha!!!" she shrieked, "I should leave you, you wretch. To your Snookums, maybe—Boo-hoo-ho. But I wouldn't care. Only you know it, you low down creature, how can I leave. Can I go to work. Can I get a job at my age? Oh you—you—worse than a quadruped you!!!"

"Aha? Then you admit you're dependent upon me, do you, woman?"

"And more's the misery I'm in because of it!" wailed Mrs. Doohickey.

"Then what would you do if I croaked. You admit you can't go to work. I got nothing to leave yu—and—"

"You're not even insured," added Mrs. Doohickey.

"Aha!!!" roared Mr. Doohickey exultantly leaping from his chair like a new initiatee of the hot seat at Texas Guinans!!! "Aha!!! THAT'S what I've been waiting for you to say, INSURANCE!"

And forthwith he called Mr. Splint on the phone, saying:

"O. K., Splinty old muffin, I think we've finally convinced the little lady. Dash up here at once and explain how we both concokted and wrote the letter signed Snookums. Ah, it seemed bitter cruel, old boy, but it was all for the little woman's own good.

MISTER SPLINTS mounted the rostrum to address the Convention of Insurance Salesman.

"You see gentlemen," he began proudly, "the beneficial results of what we term the 'Cold Canvas Campaign.' I have this day drawn on behalf of Mr. Doohickey, who is a hard-boiled baby if there ever was one, a fifty-thousand dollar life insurance policy. In addition to that Mr. Doohickey has also taken out a special ten thousand dollar accident policy—as a precaution (he didn't say) against the possibility that Snookums might some day take it into her head to call personally instead of just writing."

Between BUGS

By LLOYD MAYER

Sandie Takes A Lesson in Finance

ONE MINUTE [illegible] seems [illegible] beckoning [illegible] behind [illegible] nose [illegible] Mr. Roe Stomachwhistle [illegible] extinguishing [illegible] looking across [illegible] Sandie Carlton [illegible] he was lunching at the Cinhaha Hunt.

"My dear, you SIMply SLAY me!" she responded [illegible]. "I mean that's such a DEPRESSing kind of an IDEA to bring UP at this point [illegible] Oh my DEAR! ALphabet SOUP [illegible] less!" she added brightly, as the waiter set down a [illegible] with a flourish and beat a retreat. "Let's pick out FUNNY WORDS SHALL WE?"

"I don't expect sympathy," pursued her escort a little miserably, "but at my age a fellow can't help feeling sick when he's lost everything especially after being such a big shot in Wall Street. Look at me! At forty-three I'm a broken man!" And he began sobbing into his soup plate.

"My dear, DON'T take ON so!" Sandie implored him. "Haven't you even got enough money left to take me to a MOVie?"

Mr. Stomachwhistle, despite his overwhelming grief, was forced to chuckle at her naivete. "Naturally I've managed to conceal a few assets," he confided with a cunning look. "If you want to go to a talkie—"

"My dear, I haven't been to a TALKie in WEEKS the [illegible] POSitively unSPEAKable!" she confessed with a shudder. "Let's go to a STRONG SILENT movie or else to a SPEAKeasy, shall we?"

"Whatever you say," he replied affably. "Only look there, will you?" And he pointed to the window. Turning to follow his glance, Sandie was amazed to see a crowd of people flattening their noses against the pane, their eyes fixed upon Mr. Stomachwhistle. "Creditors," he explained bitterly, swallowing half the alphabet in his soup at one gulp. "They pursue me even here."

"My dear, how VULgar of them!" exclaimed Sandie in disgust. "Why don't you call the poLICE, my dear?"

"Do you think I want to get myself arrested?" He twisted around in his chair and stuck out his tongue at the little group peering through the window. Several of them made faces at him in return, standing their ground defiantly.

"It's no use—they won't go away and leave me in peace," continued Mr. Stomachwhistle wearily, finishing the last of his soup. "What are we having next? Lobster farcie?"

THE WAITER, who had been hovering over them, suddenly cackled and laid an egg on the table.

"My DEAR, how AWfully peCUliar!" ejaculated Sandie.

"We didn't order that!" protested Mr. Stomachwhistle, glaring at the servant menacingly.

"But I had to lay it somewhere!" explained the waiter soothingly. "I'm a Rhode Island RED, circulating propaganda. The egg, of course, is merely a symbol indicating our desire to obtain freedom from the YOLK."

"It sounds like a lot of mayonnaise to me, garcon!" sniffed Mr. Stomachwhistle. "Personally, I'll take spinach!"

"Are you a one hundred per cent COMmunist, REALly?" Sandie asked the waiter eagerly.

"Well, you see, miss," he replied, "I'm only working part time at it now on account of the unemployment situation. The rest of the time I'm merely a waiter," he added with tears in his eyes. Suddenly unable to control his emotion, he picked up the egg and broke it in the exact center of the bald spot on Mr. Stomachwhistle's head.

"My dear, I've NEVer seen ANYthing funnier in my LIFE!" shrieked Sandie, laughing heartily. "I'm about to have hysTERics no less!"

"It looked so much like an aluminum frying pan I simply couldn't resist the temptation, sir!" smiled the waiter. "Anyway, as a former barber I assure you you needed an egg shampoo."

Mr. Stomachwhistle, purple with rage, was rubbing his head with a napkin. "I'll have you fired, you impudent rascal!" he roared thickly.

"ROE darling!" Sandie cautioned him, leaning over and patting his hand. "You MUSTn't make a SCENE, my dear. Actually it's rather beCOMing you know—the EGG I mean. It makes you look as if you had AUburn HAIR suddenly SPROUTing out of a vast desert of baldness—[illegible] know what I mean."

"That's a good one, that is!" chuckled the waiter, slapping his thigh. "I'll be running along now after the next course, if you'll excuse me," he added apologetically. "But I certainly do hate to miss any of this witty conversation, Miss."

"Rather an unusual character, don't you think?" giggled Sandie, looking after him.

MR. STOMACHWHISTLE merely grunted morosely and buttered a roll, his eyes seeking the window through which the army of his creditors was still peering at him. It didn't increase his composure to discover that they were also eating and he averted his glance quickly.

"I'd been planning to ask you to marry me, Sandie," he said abruptly to Sandie. "Then the crash came. I cannot ask you to marry a PORPOISE. I mean a pauper," he corrected himself hastily.

"I should hope NOT my dear," she agreed heartily. "I mean it doesn't sound a BIT alluRing to ME, my dear. But I mean, are you ACtually a PORpoise at this point, my dear? I mean it sounds rather FISHy to ME because I mean you SAID you were conCEALing some ASsets or something, didn't you?"

"Not so loud!" hissed Mr. Stomachwhistle. "It isn't strictly legal, you know," he added guardedly. "To all intents and purposes I'm a purpose—but—"

"You mean to all inTENTS and PURposes you're a PORpoise, my dear, DON'T you?" interrupted Sandie helpfully.

The waiter returned with the lobster farcie at that moment. "Opera singers train on farcie," he remarked as he served them deftly. "You know—do re mi farcie la si do!"

"You have a charming VOICE, my dear!" Sandie gushed flatteringly. "Don't YOU think so, Roe?"

"Yes, indeedy!" concurred Mr. Stomachwhistle amiably. "I think he ought to follow a different calling with a voice like that! And I'd suggest hog calling!"

"Very good sir—very good indeed!" chuckled the waiter. "If I might make so bold as to say so, sir—you're not 'arf as stupid as you look!"

"Thanks," said Mr. Stomachwhistle with a grateful smile, handing him a bill of large denomination.

"Thank YOU, sir!" cried the waiter, whose name by the way, was Thornton Mildew.

"Say, have you got any MORE bills you're going to hand ROUND, my dear?" Sandie asked Mr. Stomachwhistle belligerently.

"Bills?" he repeated mildly. "My dear girl, I could paper my barns at Westbury with bills. I used to confess frankly in my speeches at convention banquets that in making my success I owed everybody a great deal and had a great admiration and affection for them all."

* * *

"BUT you were aBOUT to tell me about your conCEALED ASsets, my dear," she reminded him. "I haven't the SLIGHTest IDEA what you're TALKing about, of course, but it SOUNDS kind of CRYPtic and inTRIguing no less!"

"Oh yes, that's right," replied Mr. Stomachwhistle, settling back in his chair and lighting a fresh cigaret. "Well, you remember my Aunt Lulu, don't you?"

"Oh, the COCK-eyed old lady who used to drive herself ROUND in one of those arCHAic electric BUGgy effects. Whatever became of HER for heaven's sake?"

"She was very fond of me, you know—and I really entertained a very deep affection for her. So much so that I offered to relieve her altogether of the management of her finances."

"How AWfully SWEET of you, my dear!"

"Oh, I was just a big-hearted kid in those days, you know!" he laughed reminiscently.

"And did you make OODles and OODles of muZUma for the old coot!" Sandie inquired eagerly.

"Don't be silly! After I'd made a few investments for her, she died of anxiety, apparently leaving nothing but an old calico wrapper and a set of andirons. As a matter of fact I came into her entire estate, only without any publicity."

"But you didn't do anything disHONest did you?"

"Oh, not at all! You see, what I did was to misappropriate her funds gradually instead of to swindle her all at once, the way most nephews in my position would have done. As trustee, of course, I was in a position to do as I pleased and naturally I had to look out for myself first!"

"She didn't need the money ANYways did she?"

"Not as much as I did!" admitted Mr. Stomachwhistle, earnestly.

"Well, my dear, I think as long as you didn't do anything disHONest it's perfectly all RIGHT, only you can't be so BROKE if you've got all that MONey!"

"But it's a mere trifle compared to what I had before the Wall Street smash!" he complained dismally. "And I so much wanted a wife like you—a real helpmeet!"

"What you want NOW, my dear, is somebody to HELPmeet your exPENSes," she retorted, beginning to put on her gloves. "My dear, do you REALize it's three-THIRty at this point? I mean we've got to leap HENCE this INstant if we're going to the MOVies, my dear!"

"We'll have to sneak out the side door so as to avoid my creditors if you don't mind," Mr. Stomachwhistle said as he helped her on with her coat.

"My dear, I think it's TERribly exCIting to be fiNANcially emBARrassed the way you are!" said Sandie, snuggling her arm in his as they left the clubhouse. "I wish you'd be RECKless and buy me an ORchid at this point, my dear!" she added wistfully. "I mean I ACtually DO!"

Will Decides To Lay Late

I USED TO WRITE A good deal about what I read in the papers. But you know I been reading a lot of these other Writers of Sundays, and they wirte mostly about themselvs, and they seem to be doing mighty well too.

It seems that away back in Caesars or Heflins or somebodys early days there was some old Writer called Pepy, and all he did was just write what he did. Well he didnt do much (but write) for there wasent much to do in those days. Oh yes, drink. Well he had some kind of peculiar ways of saying things and his spelling was bad. (I cant personally stand anybody that cant spell.)

But this old fellow could make nothing sound good the way he laid it on the line. He had two expressions, and if he just hadent happened to use them, why none of our modern Writers could have copied him, for thats all they can copy him in, they just use these two lines over again and again and think they are doing a Pepys. One was "Laye late," and the other was "Woke betimes." Well I am going to do some of that "Lay lating" and "Woke betimes."

I WILL START on my trip east from California a couple of weeks ago. The night before I started I "Lay Late." No I dident, it was two nights before I started that I Lay late. The morning that I started I dident lay so late. In fact I dident lay hardly at all. I had to catch an Aeroplane that was leaving away over in Burbank, Cal. (Thats not Burbanks home. Its Jim Jefferies' and I was away out at my little ranch at Santa Monica. It was leaving around Five oclock and you cant do much "Laying late" and make that kind of a getaway.

My Oldest Son Bill was to drive me, and that meant I had to get up just one hour earlier than usual in order to start trying to get him up. Well anyhow I "Woke Betimes." I woke betimes because I had two alarm clocks set for the job, and they both went off thirty minutes early.

WELL 3:30 A. M. is pretty tough time to start a diary. Should be working on a Dairy, and juicing a Jersey Heifer at that hour. Well it was dark, and we drove in toward Hollywood, and got pretty near through it before we saw a single car. Hollywood is so wild that there wasent even a Street lamp burning at that hour. We got to the field. Bought my Ticket for Ft Worth Texas, had some Baggage Excess. (I told my wife I dident need all three of those shirts). Stood around about half asleep, and then had a cup of Coffee. I dont do much eating when I am on Plane, or getting on one. I am mighty easy to get sick. Its a big three, Wasp Motored Fokker Plane. Its still dark when I tell the Kid goodbye, and to take good care of my Ponies, and to stay off em, and only play his own.

Burbank and Glendale look mighty sparkling like from the early dawn, then out over Los Angeles. Its spread out, well you have to look at it by lights to see how far it is spread out. Then we hit for out over Pomona, and on over through the mountain pass to Banning and the fashionable Palm Springs. Then nothing to see till we hit Phoenix, or near Phoenix where the Irrigation lads start in. Those thousands of flat squares are beautiful from the air.

AT PHOENIX was met by a band of Citizens that wanted me to stay over or come back to a big affair where they were going to have 17 rail road Presidents at the Fruit Shippers Convention, and they was going to have a Golf Game, between the seventeen and seventeen Vice Presidents were to Caddy for them. That would be nothing new, they have been carrying the bag for em all the time. But it give Vice Presidents a chance to do something. Then the rest of the Audience was composed of other Vice Presidents. But they did plan on having a great time and I hear they had it.

They give me a big box of the finest dates I ever ate. (Smuggled over from California I bet). Then on down over Tombstone, Ariz. and the next gas stop was Tucson. Another Delegation had some kind of a "Racket" they wanted me to stop over and enter into. No it was Douglas where this bunch was. It was on the Mexican Line. I wouldent have minded stopping there.

THEN on the El Paso, had Lunch, changed Pilots, got there about 1:30 p. m. about three days ride on the train, then started across Texas.

Now you have started something. Oh, yes, I am leaving out some of these "Woke Betimes." At each stop I "Woke Betimes" for I slept all the rest of the way. Well I "Lay late" at Big Springs and like to not "Woke Betimes" to see another Deligation, that wanted to draw my attention to a 15-story brick hotel that I would pass over as we passed over the town on leaving. Associated Press man there, and he got everything wrong but the name of the Town and misspelled it.

Then to Abiline (Sweet Abiline, My Abiline, in all my dreams). I havent sung that old song since 1920. There I woke betimes and Amon G. Carter had a special Plane to meet me to take me to Ft. Worth. For he dident want me to have to see Dallas. Had a nice night there, woke betimes, met a lot of nice folks that was going to handle my little Charity tour through the State, then flew up to Tulsa, where met equally as nice bunch for Okla. Then drove my Auto 45 miles to Chelsea, and spent the night at my only Sisters home, saw a new Niece baby, nice Baby, too, had fine visit, lots of my family.

LAY LATE. No, not there, awoke betimes, then caught the plane for St. Louis, was going to Chicago, but just as both planes was pulling out grabbed the one for Columbus, Ohio, and New York. Comedians never know what they are doing. Wouldnt take the money for my fare on the plane so everybody had to wait till they went and got the ticket fixed up. They will trust the Pilots with your life but not with $19 which was the fare to Columbus.

Got to Indianapolis, was met by some Newspaper friends and Co-workers of the Indianapolis News. Talked about Kin Hubbard, the late Humorist, "Abe Martin." They told me my junk had took his old place on the back page, (which it had occupied for 25 years). Imagine me trying to replace him. That would be like Clara Bow replacing Mrs. Chapman Catt. So long, I am going to Lay late.

Confessions of a Private Detective

By Operative T-99—Per Damon Runyon

The Secret of White Wine And Sickly Dahlias

WHENEVER I RECALL the peaceful precincts of the little town of Old Hampshire, in the law-abiding State of New Jersey, I always regret the part the Eagle Orb Agency played in an incident that tended to upset the decorum of the community. However, I ease my conscience with the thought that it was in duty's name, and when duty calls the Eagle Orb has yet to be found derelict.

I was summoned to the town of Old Hampshire by a Mr. Simeon Simmons, who turned out to be a highly respected banker of the town and a pillar in the local church. In fact, I believe he was a deacon, or something to that effect.

He lived on a street of fine old white houses, with spacious lawns, and with no fences between the properties, so that looking from one end of the street to the other, the eye met a vista of velvety green turf, shaded by noble trees. It was a lovely sight.

MR. SIMMONS made a great secret of my arrival, and of the purpose of my visit, taking me into a library on the second floor of his palatial home overlooking the lawn and the lovely old white house of his next door neighbor.

A gentleman in suspenders was watering the adjoining lawn from a long hose, and I noticed that he seemed to be concentrating the water on one point, a clump of rather sickly looking dahlias growing against the side of his house. The unhealthiness of these dahlias was all the more noticeable, because everything else around the premises was green, and flourishing.

"Now," said Mr. Simeon Simmons, lowering his voice, "in my cellar I have had stored for years in vats, a considerable quantity of rare old white wine. It is pre-war wine, you understand, and I have always kept it for my stomach. I have a bad stomach. What is it the Book says, 'A little wine for the stomach's sake.' Well, that is the idea. I would not have it publicly known for any amount of money, however, that I have this wine, as wine drinking is not approved in these parts, especially by the women. You will say nothing about it. Now, then, this wine is disappearing on me. It is being systematically stolen."

"Perhaps it is evaporating," I suggested.

"No," said Mr. Simmons. "No chance of that. It is going too rapidly for that. I have five big vats, and two of them have been drained dry, all within a few weeks. A thief is in our midst."

"Well, do you suspect anyone?" I asked. "Your neighbors, perhaps?"

"No," he said. "My nearest neighbor, the gentleman you see ... the yard watering his lawn, is one of my oldest and dearest friends. His name is Mr. Job Calloway. I have known him 40 years, and he has a splendid reputation in the community. He is an undertaker by trade.

"We have never had a quarrel as neighbors, and have always helped each other out in any way we could. I am even lending him my water to water his lawn right now, as his own pipes have been shut off for repairs for some time."

AT MR. SIMMONS' request I made an investigation of the cellar and saw the vats where he stored his white wine. They were enormous affairs, and I judged that Mr. Simmons had been storing up for a long time before the war, if it was prewar.

There was one tiny window in the cellar, not large enough for a cat to crawl through, opening on the neighbor Calloway's side of the house, but I saw no possibility of this wee window figuring in the theft of the wine, and it was the only opening in the cellar except the inside doors. I commenced to think it was an outside job, but as a matter of form I examined the premises outside.

I NOTICED that Neighbor Calloway was taking his water from a tap against the side of Mr. Simmons' house near the small window, but paid no attention to the circumstance at the moment. I told Mr. Simmons I would later like to see the servants and the others in his household without them knowing why, and then I went to a small hotel in the town of Old Hampshire to clean up a little and think things over.

Afterwards I took a walk around town, and happened to see Mr. Calloway in front of the postoffice, so I retraced my steps to the neighborhood of his home, and made an examination of the sickly dahlias. They had been on my mind since I noted their contrast with the healthy growing shrubs and flowers all around them.

At first glance the clump of dahlias seemed merely withered and dying, but I began poking about in this clump with a cane I invariably carry, and as I suspected the stick encountered a metallic object.

Stooping down, I saw the mouth of a large funnel craftily buried in the ground, and all was clear to me at once. Slipping around to the rear of Mr. Calloway's home, I found a cellar door, and surreptitiously entering this cellar I soon found that the small end of the buried funnel led into large basins in the cellar, and that these basins were full of a white liquid that was indubitably wine.

I HASTENED outside again, and went over to Mr. Simon's house and explained the details of the theft to him. It was plain to be seen that instead of attaching his hose to the water tap, Neighbor Calloway had been inserting the rubber tube through the small window of the cellar into Mr. Simmons' vats, and purloining the wine by process of suction. In fact, this was his bland admission when taxed by us with the theft of the wine.

At first Mr. Simmons wanted to have his perfidious neighbor arrested, but Mr. Calloway said if he went to jail he would sue Mr. Simmons for damages because the wine had ruined his dahlia beds, which he deemed very valuable. He held a discussion lasting far into the night, with me attempting to act as mediator between the old neighbors with no great success. In the meantime, they were taking occasional sips of the wine for their stomachs' sake, and finally they resented my suggestions, and said I was interfering with their ancient friendship, and I left them locked in each other's arms.

I have often wondered since if a wine that can kill dahlias is really good for the stomach's sake.

BALBO'S BRAZIL FLIGHT MAKES ATLANTIC MERE POND

Sen. Wagner:

'WE MUST ADOPT SYSTEM THAT WILL ASSURE WORKER WAGES THE YEAR AROUND'

Unemployment Insurance Through Reserve Funds, and Far-Sighted Planning of Public Improvements to Provide Jobs in Slack Times, Urged by Senator From New York.

By ROBERT F. WAGNER,
United States Senator from New York.

MERE numbers fail to tell the entire story of the current period of unemployment. There is at present great distress throughout the United States not only because many millions are out of work but because these millions of men and women have been without jobs for many long months.

The workman who loses his job doesn't forthwith rush off to the relief agency. First he uses up the little balance at the savings bank that he had painfully accumulated for a rainy day.

When that is gone he buys a little on credit from the neighborhood store. Sometimes he manages to borrow from a relative or friend. Meanwhile, he has cut down his expenditures to the barest necessities. Only when hunger and eviction from his home actually stare him in the face does the American workman bury his pride and make application at a charitable institution.

SENATOR ROBERT F. WAGNER, who, in the accompanying article, suggests means to avert future depressions and insure employment for the American working man.

Need Urgent
State and Business Must Do Utmost

This succession of events has, during the past year, occurred in hundreds of thousands of families throughout the country. Before me I have the reports of 128 relief agencies, only a sampling of the entire United States.

In September, 1929, these agencies helped 36,300 families. By November, 1930, the number had mounted to 115,166.

This threefold increase in the number of families applying for charity forces us to realize the extent of the tragedy which is being enacted in every city throughout the land. It compels us to seek an answer to the questions:

What can we do to prevent unemployment? How can we prevent the suffering which it produces?

The immediate emergency is, of course, entitled to primary consideration. No one must go cold or hungry. It is far more important to relieve such cruel want than to split hairs in a debate whether the cities, the states or the federal government should undertake the job.

The problem is so big, so difficult and so important that we shall hardly be doing enough if private business, municipalities, states and the federal government all exert themselves to the utmost in a common effort to save the situation. Neither should there be any doubt as to how we should proceed.

Work Preferred
Better for Those in Need Than Charity

The more we accomplish our purpose by providing work rather than by providing charity, the better it is for the people we help and the better for the nation as a whole.

It does not do a man's spine any good to be the recipient of relief. Our workmen do not want it. They want jobs. They want an opportunity to earn their bread. They rightfully look to the government to assist them in finding such an opportunity. Since there is no demand for labor in private industry the demand must come from public enterprises.

There is plenty of necessary work to be done. There is not a state in the Union that could not employ thousands of men in building new highways and in widening or straightening old ones. Thousands of railroad grade crossings await elimination. Almost every city in the United States has a shortage of schools. Postoffices, courthouses, river improvements can put hundreds of thousands of men to work.

Some men throw up their hands in wild alarm and cry that we cannot afford to spend the money for these improvements. That is false economy. We are spending the money in any event. Is it not the wiser policy to distribute it in pay envelopes in return for useful work rather than disburse it on the breadline?

Right now the federal government is handicapped by its failure to be prepared to meet the business depression. It takes many months for a public construction project to get under way. The site must be acquired; plans must be made; specifications must be prepared and advertised so that contractors may bid for the work.

Avoid Delay
Would Have Plans Prepared Far in Advance

These delays can be avoided. One of the bills that I have been advocating in the Senate for the past three years requires that plans for public construction be prepared long in advance so that when a depression is imminent men can be put actually to work on the project on short notice.

Had such a policy been in effect during the past year hundreds of thousands of men could have been kept at work

Eckener to Command Airship Carrying the Russo-German Scientific Expedition Into Frozen North This Year

By CHARMION VON WIEGAND,
Universal Service Staff Correspondent.

MOSCOW, Jan. 24, 1931.

PLANS for a history-making Zeppelin flight of exploration over the regions of the North Pole this year are being perfected under the auspices of the International Aero-Arctic Society, which is endeavoring to unite the best scientific forces of Russia and Germany in the daring venture.

This expedition is to traverse one portion of a course which is expected to be the forerunner of a Zeppelin passenger route from London across the polar regions to Alaska and thence south to San Francisco.

Capt. Hugo Eckener will command the great airship on the proposed flight to Northern Siberia and a portion of the Arctic Ocean.

Luxury
Comfortable Ships May Cruise Over Arctic

Prof. Otto Schmidt, commander of the Sedov Expedition which recently returned from a voyage of discovery during which the Soviet flag was planted on the world's most northern territory, will accompany the ship at the head of a group of German and Russian scientists and explorers.

Chukhovsky, who made the spectacular rescue of Mariano and Zappi, members of the Italia crew, two years ago, also will join the expedition. The Zeppelin will fly the Soviet flag.

A picture of luxurious Zeppelins with cozy cabins, excellent cuisine and all the comforts of great trans-Atlantic liners, cruising over the Arctic wastes through the long polar night was conjured up for me by Prof. Schmidt.

Not even the ill-starred expedition of Nobile on the Italia has frightened Prof. Schmidt and his intrepid fellow explorers.

It is a definite possibility, according to Prof. Schmidt, that within a year or two travelers will be able to step into a Zeppelin at London and in a comparatively few hours be carried across the north of Europe, out over the Arctic regions to Alaska and thence down the Pacific coast to the Golden Gate. The trip across the Pacific, not to mention the 12 days from Leningrad to Vladivostok on the trans-Siberian Railroad would thus be obviated.

"Two small colonies, including one woman, are now encamped within the Arctic circle in the polar night," Prof. Schmidt told me. "They are the group of 11 left by the ice breaker Sedov on Franz Josef Land, the most northern colony in the world today, and the four men deposited on Serge Kamenev Island, many hundred miles to the east."

Serge Kamenev Island is one barren rock of a new archipelago, which the crew of the Sedov Expedition discovered and explored. This is called Northern Land and is due north of the great Taimir Peninsula, the most northern point in Siberia.

It has been approached by other explorers from its western coast. But it was the Sedov group which this year discovered six new islands on its eastern coast.

Among the 11 colonists spending a year on Franz Josef Land is a young woman, Nina Petrovna Demme. She is a biologist and the wife of the governor of the colony, Bjashevich. The only living white woman who has ever gone so far into the frozen north, she expects to make scientific experiments.

"These two colonies," Prof. Schmidt explained, "form the nucleus for two stations, necessary to the establishment of Zeppelin

The dotted line from Leningrad indicates the general Arctic area to be traversed by the Zeppelin exploratory expedition this year on which a Russo-German group of scientists will study the possibilities of the polar passenger route as well as gathering other Arctic data.

COURAGEOUS—Nina Petrovna Demme, biologist, the only woman in the Soviet colony of eleven spending a year in Franz Josef Land, as described in the accompanying article. She is the wife of the governor of the colony and is conducting scientific experiments.

HISTORIC FEAT GIVES NEW SIGNIFICANCE TO ITALY'S AERIAL PROGRESS

From Mechanical and Human Viewpoint We Are Proud to Consider This Enterprise A Product of Spirit That Dominates Our Nation Under Fascism, Asserts Duce.

By BENITO MUSSOLINI,
Premier of Italy.

(Special Cable Dispatch.)

ROME, Jan. 24.

SINCE the American "Lone Eagle," Col. Charles A. Lindbergh, crossed the Atlantic alone, no other aeronautical enterprise has had the new and original significance and the importance of the flight of the Italian aviators commanded by Gen. Italo Balbo.

BENITO MUSSOLINI

It is curious, almost paradoxical, that the greatest example of individualism in the field of aviation should have come from an Anglo-Saxon country, a land of hereditary discipline and collective training, while from Italy, a Latin country of individualistic temperament and ardent personal initiative, now has come the greatest modern example of strict, collective discipline and splendid teamwork spirit.

This alone should be sufficient to demonstrate the tremendous material and moral changes which have taken place in Italy these last few years since the war and under the Fascist regime.

The 11 planes have happily landed on Rio de Janeiro's waters after a flight of more than 6,000 miles—a flight which started at Orbetello, just north of Rome, and included a jump across the ocean from Bolama, Portuguese Guinea, to Port Natal, Brazil.

They have demonstrated the evident high grade of security reached by aviation. The flight has not been a matter of one pilot's exhibition of prowess, nor of exceptional stunting ability, but of 40 men expert in flying. Not one machine was constructed specifically. All 14 planes that began the flight were of the self-same type.

Flying Today
No Longer a Chance, but An Enterprise

There is no question of the scientific nature of the undertaking here. But there is the problem of proving to the public that we have entered an era of perfect material construction of airplanes, and one of safety born of experience on the part of pilots.

Flying today is no longer a sporting chance. It is an enterprise, like any other, offering its percentage of uncertainty and imponderability, like all human affairs.

So, in the present case, 14 seaplanes left Italy to cross the ocean and all 14 arrived at Bolama, on Africa's distant coast, despite a terrific mid-winter storm in the Mediterranean and general unfavorable atmospheric conditions.

Arriving at the crucial point in the trans-Atlantic flight, 10 of the planes surmounted it without any accident whatsoever. The eleventh plane, though forced to land during the flight, could join the other planes at Fort Natal, demonstrating again that ability to overcome every difficulty and reach its goal.

Firm Will
Of Pilots Carried Them To Goal

There was also the plane piloted by Gen. Valle, which, leaving an hour late, raced across the ocean, joining the squadron along the Brazilian coast.

Fortunately it was possible to save the entire crew of the twelfth plane as well as a great part of the plane itself, and, though this plane was later the victim of an unfortunate accident, nevertheless, it rested, being towed 900 miles on the high seas.

One should remark, too, the firm will of the aviators who saw some of their well-loved companions perish before their eyes at the flight's beginning and yet carried on victoriously to their goal. And here I pause to render homage to the efforts of the crews of the other two planes that started the flight across the ocean from Bolama.

Due to unforeseen accidents, one of the planes caught fire and the other crashed in a forced landing, causing the death of five men. Death struck unexpectedly and mysteriously. Yet their sacrifices made victory even more sacred, for it has shown to what perils the fliers were exposed.

Those who gave their lives will be remembered among all the heroes who have sprinkled the roads of progress with their blood. Their sacrifice has made even more beautiful the victory. It would have made the necessity doubly fortunate.

BRAZIL FLIGHT DEMONSTRATES EFFICIENCY OF ITALIAN SEAPLANES, SAYS MUSSOLINI

Venture Viewed as Product of Spirit Which Dominates Fascist Italy Today

There are persons, it seems to be particularly considered, ingenious enough to this enterprise. The first point is the technical difficulties. These are considerable, and attempt at a record flight and consist chiefly in the enormous weight of the fuel that must be transported. This makes take-offs difficult and landings extremely dangerous.

So much is this the case that other planes attempting trans-Atlantic flights, if forced to come down, have first opened their cargo tanks for some little time before landing, in order to reduce the weight and thus render more favorable conditions.

Italy
Only Power to Speed Seaplane Development

The second point is the use of seaplanes. It must be remembered that Italy was the only world power which has given great impetus to the development of seaplanes. It has been Italy, As is well known, the seaplane is much less easy and convenient to manoeuver than the airplane, because the position of its motor, which must never touch the water under any circumstances, makes the plane a little unbalanced.

It is also well-known that the other great nations in the field of aviation, even most trans-Atlantic flights, if forced to come down, have first opened their cargo tanks for some little time before landing, in order to reduce the weight and thus render more favorable conditions.

Unprecedented
Difficulties Faced Crews On Long Flight

One should consider the unprecedented difficulties of this kind of flight. For more than 2,000 miles and for more than 17 unbroken hours, as they flew across the Atlantic those 40 men had to watch one another's every move, even the most insignificant.

A squadron flight in closed formation brings the necessity of such close attention and such continuous effort that it shatters the strongest nerves. The distance between the wings of the planes is minimal, while the pace is most speedy and our pockets are immovable. Woe, if two planes touch or hit each other.

In darkness and storm the slightest mistake would mean inevitable disaster. Such a moment, one mere second of distraction, may mean the loss of companions, the destruction of the plane, the sacking of mourning's shadow over the undertaking, and, in a certain sense, a diminution of its value as a collective victory.

From the mechanical and human viewpoint, we are ready to consider this enterprise the most difficult to start which Fascist Italy today. When Fascism came into power, the Italian air forces could have been considered as less than inexistent. I can remember that even, when I wanted a plane to rush to the eruption at Aetna, I could not find one available.

It was then I decided to reconstruct our air forces, and I considered that one of our regime's principal aims. We created in Air Ministry in 1925, and since that time Italian aviation has gone ahead with unprecedented vigor. We found Italian aviation depressed and the pilots unstructured and unconfident. We have changed all that. Since then Fascism has created an air force of which it and the nation might justly be proud.

Italian aviation's entire experience was mobilized for this enterprise. For long months experts in navigation, mechanics, and aerodynamics worked incessantly in perfecting the planes.

Every detail was the object of careful studies. The causes preceding accidents were corrected and eliminated with the greatest care, and today we can affirm with pleasure that the experts have fully accomplished their aims.

They have created a type of machine capable of realizing the ends for which it was planned, not only under special or fortunate conditions, but a type, which in all its 12 examples, has demonstrated itself superior to the difficulties which had to be overcome under whatever aspect they presented themselves.

This signifies that, if a hundred of these planes were put to the test, they would all have the same probability of fulfilling it.

In order to make the results more comprehensible to our minds, it is sufficient to recall the difficulties that had to be overcome in the automobile field before arriving at that absolute confidence in the automobile which exists today.

Auto Races
Seldom Achieve as Much Success

Besides, we need only to recall even the most recent automobile races to prove that such races seldom achieve as much success in regularity of performance as the flight of our planes achieves in the field of aeronautics.

Very few automobile races indeed, have seen 11 machines out of 14 lined up at the start arrive at the end of a race of 400 or 500 miles. And this was a flight of 6,000 miles.

Among the military and technical characteristics of this Savoia-Marchetti seaplane is the fact that it has been able to take off with a burden one ton greater than was the maximum load possible a year ago, when the first trial flights were made.

This greater carrying power was most important because, besides increasing the amount of the fuel cartiable, it allowed for the inclusion of radio apparatus aboard, which meant also the additional weight of the operator.

Improvements made in the Savoia-Marchetti apparatus have made it possible to increase the crew from two to four men, thereby distributing the work more rationally and admitting normal navigation.

This considerably increased probabilities for success, through the alternation of two pilots, both of whom are at the same time freed from worries about the motors, which are entrusted to a mechanic.

Finally the presence of a radio operator allowed for continual contact with land and with the other machines of the formation.

Another technical result gained from Gen. Balbo's flight, which is particularly important from a military viewpoint, has been brought out by the unfortunate accidents which obliged two of the planes to land in mid-ocean.

Independent
Can Land, Make Repair And Take Off Sea

They showed that seaplanes can easily land on the ocean, resist the action of the waves for a long time, and at the end take off again; all this independent of aid, if given a radio so as to be able to communicate the plane's exact situation to other planes and to ships in transit along the route.

The preparation of the crews was somewhat more strenuous than a pilot's ordinary training. The enterprise required men of unusual physical resistance, unimpeachable expertness and sense of equilibrium, and with sound hearts.

The machines were created by men from human genius, and human will and ambition for power and greatness. Therefor, even if the material creations are mechanisms, they always represent symbolically an expression of the soul.

GEN. ITALO BALBO, who commanded the flight of Italian Army seaplanes to Brazil.

But no machine, no material contrivance, regardless of how ingenious, can ever take the place of the human heart, the human spirit. A flying machine, however strong and perfectly built, will never accomplish anything great, if it is not guided by a man's sound heart and a human will that is firm and ready for sacrifice.

During the preparation period one of the youngest participants was seriously hurt in a flight accident. His suffering constituted real torture. Nevertheless, in the hospital he said to the doctors:

Strong Will
Demonstrated by Fliers Before Takeoff

"Don't worry about my suffering. You must only think of how to cure me and put me in condition for the flight. I am not thinking so much of the pain as of being ready when we leave."

The poor youth could not be cured, nor be in condition to leave with his companions. But his will was strong, and it was the kind of will which brought the flight to a victorious conclusion.

It was the will which all the aviators demonstrated even externally and materially by putting on their black Fascist shirts at the moment of departure from Bolama.

The black shirt on that flight signified their discipline and audacious will, even at the cost of life, and their iron determination to win for Italy.

This enterprise has had for us Italians special value in sentiment and affection because Brazil was not chosen accidentally as the goal of this great trans-Atlantic flight.

It was chosen, not only on account of the friendly relations which connect us with this great Latin republic, but, also, because thus my government could send personal viva voce greetings from the homeland to the millions of Italians who have emigrated to South America.

England, it was said 20 years ago at aviation's dawn, is no longer an island, nor can she claim isolation. The Italian squadron's flight has demonstrated that not only channels, but even oceans are crossable, so that the Atlantic can now be considered a mere pond, and the humanity on its two shores near together and no longer isolated.

It will depend on men's wisdom to bring it about that this magnificent new progress in machines, in will power, and technique will always serve more completely the just cause of human spirit and civilization.

Asthma Had Him Choking, Helpless

Was Desperate, But Soon Found Lasting Relief. No Trouble Since.

Despondent sufferers from asthma or bronchial coughs will be glad to read this letter from Mr. Calvin De Bolar, 2803 Elliott Ave., St. Louis, Mo.

"I had asthma so bad and had lost sleep and coughed so hard that I felt I couldn't last much longer. After two doses of Nacor I had a change for the better. By the time I had taken one bottle my asthma was entirely gone. That was 4 months ago and I'm still free from asthma and feel perfectly well."

Hundreds of people who suffered for years from asthma and bronchial coughs state that their trouble left and has not returned. Their letters will be sent free. THE BOOK SHELF by GEORGE SEIBEL + ART COMMENT by PENELOPE REDD

Stormy Lives of Famous Authors Are Written Anew

"Life is a tragedy," said Swift, and his latest biographer tells us Swift never waited for tragedy to come to him—he always ran to meet it. "He could not take snubs and kicks and stabs as incidental . . . he was sensitive to every scratch and had quick, ungovernable impulses to strike back."

George Seibel

This explains how the most savage satirist since Juvenal failed to hurt humanity, at which he aimed poisoned darts. His venomous arrow was turned over to children to play with. Who reads "Gulliver's Travels" and realizes it is a furious attack on the hated human race?

Carl Van Doren's "Swift" (published by Viking Press) is a splendid biography of this embittered genius. He views Swift as a champion of truth and justice, for whom "the words he used were as bayonets to a soldier, verdicts to a magistrate, laws to a minister."

But Van Doren's "Swift" is more than a biography. It is the author's own commentary on life. Undoubtedly he rejoices in the frantic jests of the satirist who "left his fortune, about 11,000 pounds, to build a hospital for idiots and lunatics." The great mad Dean had a fellow feeling for those who were too human. And his biographer understands that sympathy. Both underscore the wise words Shakespeare put into the mouth of a tricksy sprite: "What fools these mortals be!"

The Frail Warrior

A writer of more agreeable exterior is pictured by Jean Marie Carre in "The Frail Warrior" (published by Coward-McCann), which is a new life of Robert Louis Stevenson. There has been much controversy over R. L. S., whose widow and family tried to paint him as a plaster saint, which caused Henley to malign him as a sort of satyr. Now the researches of writers like Steuart give us the more convincing picture of a man.

It is fitting that Stevenson, a master of style, should have his life told by a stylist like Miss Carre. This book reads as if writ on satin. It is firmly founded on fact, it is not padded with mere rhetoric—but it is so vivid and objective that we walk with Tusitala on his long pilgrimage from Edinburgh to the Samoan grave.

Harris on Wilde

Another disputable personality is again disputed by Frank Harris in "Oscar Wilde: His Life and Confessions" (published by Covici-Friede.) Harris rarely writes anything that should be taken without several grains of salt. He is "afflicted with a dramatic imagination," like some of the people he writes about, including Robert Ross, Alfred Douglas and Wilde himself.

These people were all streaked with genius and insanity—all abnormal, though gifted writers.

Bernard Shaw seems to see in much of this book, now republished, a fine piece of writing, but also a record of the squabbles of two touchy idlers, like "De Profundis." And Shaw knows.

BEST SELLERS IN PITTSBURGH

The following books are selling best in Pittsburgh bookstores, according to lists furnished by Brentanos, J. R. Weldin Company, Jones' Book Shop, Priscilla Guthrie's Book Shop, Hays' Book Shop, Kaufmann's Book Department, Horne's Book Department, Gimbels Book Department and Boggs & Buhl's Book Department:

"Success," by Lion Feuchtwanger.

Variety of Styles Displayed in Art Shows This Week

Art has a happy genius for reducing the barriers of time.

Thus in one week in Pittsburgh, industrial and democratic, Queen Mary of England smiles from a costly Munnings canvas while Queen Nefertiti, celebrated some 3,000 years ago in Egypt for domestic virtues similar to those of Queen Mary, smiles in a thousand replicas.

Penelope Redd

"Custer's Last Fight," by Mulvaney, representing fashionable painting during the eighties as does the Munnings horse represent today's, is also to be seen at the Wunderly Galleries.

Meanwhile, oblivious of popular approval, past or present, are two contemporary exhibitions. There is Alexander Brook's intellectual painting at the Junior League Gallery while Robert Schmertz's informal water colors are at Elliott's.

A Nomad Brush

Robert Schmertz, whose vocation is architecture, makes good use of his architect's perception of form in his compositions. The water colors, however, are rendered with the utmost freedom.

Using a rather rough paper, the color is applied in quick, bold brush strokes. His Venetian water colors have no kinship with orthodox versions. He paints the boats and half-figures as brilliant forms, and not as "views for the tourists."

"Corneval at Monte" (Frenchy another familiar theme, probably because of his architect's realization of form, is not a picturesque monument reserved for the public's wonder. The edifice is but the dominant form musically related to the unostentatious houses and useful boats.

This same sense of the related whole is also found in Schmertz's study of the Ninth Street Bridge. The silver pattern of the bridge frames the northern shore with its church spires of varied forms. The color runs the gamut of purple from blue, through violet, and on towards brown.

Potent Sculptures

There is a sense of pleasure in the dome about the Schmertz exhibition that communicates itself to the spectator.

Particularly appropriate at the moment, is the public exhibition of the group of African sculptures, collected by Andrew McCleary and Wilfred Perkins, now on view at the Carnegie Institute of Technology.

Amateur ethnologists are likely to be puzzled by the similarity of design between the African ceremonial masks and those used in the religious dances of the "five powers" in the Mexican exhibition at Carnegie Institute.

One reflects upon the vital influence that African sculptures such as these had on modern art through the French painters, Braque and Picasso. One also speculates upon what might have been had American painters known Mexican art 30 years ago. America instead of France might have instigated the movement towards the primitive.

Redfield in a New Medium

A sidelight on art elsewhere will divert Pittsburgh. From Toledo comes word that Redfield, the painter, has two tapestries in the exhibition of modern tapestries at the museum.

Redfield making up his palette from purple silk stockings, mohair bathing suits, and last summer's cretonne, boggles the imagination. He has gone further afield as to subject and composes a wedding in Brittany from student memories. He said:

"Everyone in the family did a block or so around the edges. I know of no way of spending a better day or evening. It seems to me that art schools should take this thing up. Have the youngsters hook what they feel into rugs, at least one could walk on them."

Birthdays of Authors

Today, January 25 (1759)—Robert Burns, Scotland's greatest poet. "Tam o' Shanter."

January 26 (1838)—Mary Mapes Dodge, American writer. "Hans Brinker."

January 27 (1741)—Hester Piozzi Thrale, English author and friend of Samuel Johnson.

January 28 (1834)—Sabine Baring-Gould, English author and clergyman. "Onward, Christian Soldier."

January 29 (1737)—Thomas Paine, author-hero of the Revolution. "Age of Reason."

January 30 (1775)—Walter Savage Landor, English author and poet. "Imaginary Conversations."

January 31 (1784)—Bernard Barton, English Quaker poet.

AIR LIBRARY GROWING

"Aces of the Air," edited by Joseph Lewis French (published by McLoughlin), is a record of daring exploits by brilliant fliers. Nearly 400 men have jumped from their planes and are members of the Caterpillar Club. Lindbergh himself made his third and fourth jumps from mail planes at night, the fourth at a height of 13,000 feet.

There is an interesting history of army flight training, as well as a chapter by Henry Ford, who says there has never yet been a real airplane engine.

Lesson of the Bird

A complete course on the construction and operation of motorless airplanes is given in "A B C of Gliding and Sailflying" (published by Henley); edited by Victor W. Page. This type of craft came into being in Germany because airplane manufacturing was forbidden by the Versailles treaty. It is rapidly becoming their national sport.

Gliding consists in sailing downhill, using the wind resistance offered by the wings of the glider to lessen the pull of gravity.

Gliding is not dangerous as long as the pilot keeps his glider balanced. It has been evolved from a study of the flight of birds.

Aviation Stories

Even the adolescent and juvenile are air-minded nowadays, as shown by "Aviation Stories" (published by Century). Reprinted from "St. Nicholas," these tales of flying adventure show what Jules Verne missed by being born too soon.

AMONG THE NEW NOVELS

A man whose new life begins the third day after he himself ends an existence that has become intolerable, is the hero of "The Third Day," by George Manning Sanders, (published by Liveright). Humphry Daine burns his home, and contrives to leave a skeleton as evidence of his own death, to lose his identity and become a farm hand, affecting loss of memory through a serious illness. After an attempt to become psychological, the novel reverts to type. It is only a simple tale after all, and Humphry settles down with one of the farmer's sisters (of course we knew he had a sister or a daughter).

Super-City

Perhaps a cartoonist is the only one that can do justice to New York, the world's greatest comic strip, so Harry Hershfield's novel, "Super-City" (published by The Elf), ought to be as lively and amusing as "Abie the Agent." Its hero is Menr Traub, who symbolizes the mad whirl of the millions of corpuscles through the veins of steel and stone that make Manhattan. The book has moments of grotesque humor, often just a step from tragedy, but its chief power is in portraying the restless extravagance of New York life. Even the style is reckless and extravagant, with flashes of poetry and philosophy.

The Rector's Daughter

The really tragic element of frustrated and inhibited lives is their utter dullness. It takes a consummate artist, like Julian Green to turn frustration into poignant drama. F. M. Mayor in "The Rector's Daughter" (published by Coward-McCann) has given us a vivid picture of the misguided futilities of an English spinsterhood, but while Mary may arouse sympathy, she fails to hold interest. We are just as bored with the hopeless narrowness of Mary's daily routine as Mary is herself. Like any monotint this story must be appreciated by delicacy of etching and perfection of style rather than dramatic appeal.

The Blue God Jazz

In "The Blue God Jazz" (published by Cloder), Donald Snow maintains a fast tempo and high key from start to finish. His characters live in an artificial world all caught in the whirl of jazz, which finally leaves them broken and weary. Margaret and Stanley, the former a cellist, the latter a radio announcer, "the boy with the golden voice," are separated in the whirl. He, adored by the public, becomes a businessman when he discovers their fickleness; she, protege of a millionaire "patron of arts," becomes a concert soloist. They are reunited in a broadcasting studio, and all's well that ends well.

The Dance of Youth

Gerhart Hauptmann and Hermann Sudermann were long the outstanding figures in German literature. But in his last novel, "The Dance of Youth" (published by Liveright and Book League), Sudermann either was not above writing a "potboiler" or the hand of the master slipped. It is a tawdry picture of a post-war family whose daughters solve the problems of their sexual life in what Sudermann apparently views as the modern manner. It is almost incredible that they are the creation of the same mind that gave us the unforgettable Lily of "The Song of Songs" and whose artistry gave us "Dame Care." But Sudermann at his worst is better than many another at his best.

Senator Wagner Advocates Unemployment Insurance

and their purchasing power would have prevented the lay-off of workers in hundreds of other industries.

We were woefully unprepared to deal comprehensively with the depression of 1930. Without plan or compass we drifted along until our ship struck the rocks. The privation which has overtaken millions of our people is the penalty we are paying. The tragedy is that those who are bearing the brunt of the burden were helpless to prevent the catastrophe or to secure the means of carrying them through the storm.

I am persuaded that the American people have had their eyes opened to the realities of business depression and unemployment. They will not tolerate in the future the confusion and cruelty of our present methods of turning out of doors millions of breadwinners in search for jobs that do not exist.

We must adopt a system that will assure each worker who is willing and able to work that he will receive wages the year round. Nothing will do more to make possible nobler, fuller and happier lives in the United States than to give every worker such a sense of economic security. It will make him a better craftsman and a better citizen.

How can we help bring about such a condition? It can in a large measure be accomplished by the cooperative efforts of business and government along the following lines:

Business can do a great deal more than it has done to regularize employment. A small number of employers who have seriously attempted it have reported success in their efforts to make jobs steady. Every individual business has its own difficulties to overcome, but with hard thinking and persistent trying, experience shows that it can be done. The federal government can help business stabilize itself by providing the necessary information of employment and unemployment in every branch of industry.

All governments—federal, state and municipal—must plan their public works far in advance and be ready to increase public construction during periods of business depression. If the release of this public construction is timed correctly it will have an influence for good far in excess of the money actually expended.

Employment tends to create more employment, because the purchasing power of the men employed puts more men to work.

Both in normal as well as abnormal times we must have a nationwide system of employment offices maintained by the states and co-operating through the federal government. The man who needs a job and the employer who needs a man are entitled to have every facility in bringing the two together.

By these methods we can minimize unemployment, but we cannot entirely eliminate it. The invention and improvement of machines, changes in fashion, foreign disturbances will continue to produce some unemployment. There is no reason, however, why the wage earner should suffer the bulk of the loss arising out of such business dislocations.

Business men have long ago learned how to accumulate reserves in profitable years in order to pay dividends to stockholders during slack periods. Every business executive knows that he must set aside a reserve to take care of depreciation on his machinery.

Why can we not have a similar reserve to take care of the wages of the men who must be temporarily laid off? The worker who is idle because he was hurt at his job is paid compensation. Why should not the worker who is idle because there is no work in his factory likewise be paid out of the reserve established for the purpose, or through insurance?

To the worker the loss of a job is just as much an accident as a physical injury. There was a time when we felt no obligation to our injured workmen. They had to shift as best they could or resort to charity. That is our present method of dealing with the unemployed.

We have learned to insure the worker against risk of physical injury. We shall do yet the same with unemployment.

Three desirable results will follow from an adequate system of unemployment insurance or reserves.

1. It will make it worthwhile for the business executive to devise methods of keeping his workers steadily employed, since the less the unemployment the smaller will be the amount of the insurance premium he will have to pay.

2. Since the workers who are temporarily laid off will continue to get wages their purchasing power will prevent the circle of unemployment from growing larger.

3. It will provide income to the workers and prevent the suffering and demoralization of the present system of charities and doles.

After all, what is the goal for which we are striving? Is it not one of our aims that life be spared the unnecessary risks, the preventable hazards that intelligence can guard against or minimize?

We want our lives to proceed more in accordance with our own plans and less in response to accident. Whether the risk be that of loss from injury in industry; or loss of employment; or destitution in old age, it brings worry and fear in its wake.

We can make our lives more noble, more spiritual and sublime by wiping out these unnecessary fears and worries that today cramp the soul of the average man and woman.

The program which I am advocating is in line with that aim and is designed to put an end to the present confusion with its intolerable lay-offs, breadlines and doles. Only when we shall have adopted this entire program shall we be in a position to say that we are treating the most important problem of our age in a civilized way.

ANDREE'S OWN STORY

Dramatic Diaries of Lost Polar Expedition

Helpless on Drifting Ice, Explorers Sight Land for First Time In Two Months

Glacier Barrier on White Island Makes Landing Impossible; Trio Abandon Themselves to Mercy of Wind and Wave

PREVIOUS INSTALMENTS of the dramatic diaries of the Andree explorers described the first two phases of their fateful Arctic expedition of 1897—their flight toward the North Pole in the balloon Eagle and its collapse on the drifting ice fields, and their two weary months of wandering across the shifting floes in a futile effort to reach land.

In today's chapter they enter the third thrilling phase of their great adventure, coming finally, worn-out and ill, to the realization that they are being carried farther and farther away from their goal on Seven Islands, helpless against the adverse polar ice drift.

On September 15, 1897, they sight White Island, the first land they have seen since July 11, but a glacier barrier bars them from it, and they are forced to surrender themselves to the inevitability of Wintering on the ice, at the mercy of wind and wave.

By S. A. ANDREE and NILS STRINDBERG,
As Reconstructed from their Diaries and Notebooks by Hans H. Ahlmann, Professor of Geography at the University of Stockholm.

"SINCE I WROTE LAST IN MY DIARY, much has changed, in truth.

These are Andree's first words on September 17. He continues:

"We labored onward with the sledges, but found at last that the new-fallen snow did not allow us to continue quickly enough.

"Fraenkel's foot, which still did not allow him to pull, compelled Strindberg and me to go back in turns and pull forward Fraenkel's sledge, too. One of Strindberg's feet was also a little out of order.

"Our meat was almost at an end, and the crossings between the floes became more and more difficult in consequence of the ice-sludge.

"But, above all, we found that the current and the wind irresistibly carried us down into the jaws between North-East Land and Franz Joseph Land, and that we had not the least prospect of reaching North-East Land.

"It was during Sept. 12 and 13, when we were obliged to lie still on account of a violent northwest wind, that we at last discovered the necessity of submitting to the inevitable, i. e., wintering on the ice. Our position is not especially good."

Worn Out
Illness and Insufficient Food Add to Perils

From this account it is clear that the drift of the ice has overpowered the three men. In spite of all their efforts they have been unable to make progress in the direction they wish.

For two long months they have struggled onward amid the ice, first toward their large supply depot on Franz Joseph Land, and then toward their smaller one on the Seven Islands. In neither effort have they been successful.

Now they stand worn out and ill, with insufficient food, with broken sledges and worn-out clothes, face to face with the necessity of surrendering themselves to the mercies of the pack-ice at the beginning of the polar winter. They are caught in the ice and delivered into the hands of a drift which is governed by wind and wave.

But they do not relax their efforts in this extremely critical situation. They endeavor by every means in their power to take such steps as will enable them to support life.

They have no idea whither the ice will carry them during the coming months. All they know is that they are drifting down toward the sea between North East Land and Franz Joseph Land.

Winter on Ice
Select Site and Begin Erection of Shelter

For a week after Sept. 9, Andree had ceased to make any notes. On Sept. 10 and 11 the three men must have continued their endeavors to proceed southwest.

On these days there was a fresh northeasterly wind, which may have given them hope that the current would carry them in the right direction. But, according to the place-determinations, they have been carried toward the north-northwest instead.

On the evening of Sept. 16, however, the wind swings to a hard northwest and the temperature falls to 17.6 degrees F. On Sept. 12 and 13 the velocity of the wind increases to 33-46.2 feet per second, and the temperature is still low.

It must have been on these last two days that the expedition lay still on account of the storm, as recorded later by Andree.

In Strindberg's memorandum-almanac there is this note for Sept. 13-15:

"Stopping on account of bad weather and snow."

When it was determined that the expedition should remain on the pack-ice, the three men first chose a suitable place for wintering. At the time they lay on a low, small floe full of fresh-water pools, which indicated that it was composed of small fragments which would easily fall to pieces when spring came.

Their first step, therefore, was to make their way to a neighboring floe which was larger, stronger and richer in hummocks.

"We came to the new floe by rafting with the boat, and soon found a suitable building plot consisting of a large piece of ice which we hollowed out to some extent. The sides and the parts that were wanting we supplied by filling up with blocks of ice and snow, over which we threw water, which froze and made it solid and durable."

Fraenkel
His Foot Improves as March Is Halted

On Sept. 15, a hard north-north-west gale still blew and the temperature was 25 degrees F. The skies were covered with clouds.

On that day "we at last succeeded in getting a seal. I had the luck to put a ball right through its head, so that it was killed on the spot and could easily be brought ashore. Thanks to this, we had tolerably large rations for the next three weeks.

"We ate all of the seal except the skin and the bones. I do not except the stomach and the contents of the stomach and the intestines and the liver. But the contents of the stomach consisted of hardly anything else than empty (crayfish) shells of the same animal that had stopped up the hydrogen-gas apparatus (at Dane's Island).

"Every part of the seal tastes very nice (fried). We are especially fond of the meat and the blubber. May we but shoot some scores of seals so that we can save ourselves.

"The bears seem to have disappeared, and of other game there are visible only ivory gulls, which, it is true, are not to be dispised, but which cost too much ammunition.

"The ivory gulls come and sit on the roof of the tent. Remarkably enough, the fulmars seem to have disappeared, and of other birds only a great auk or possibly a young black guillemot has been visible during the last few days.

"Fraenkel's foot is better now, but will hardly be well within a couple of weeks. Strindberg's feet are also bad.

"I have made a landing-net to catch plankton or anything else that can be found in the water; we shall see how it succeeds. A fortunate result of the attempt may improve our difficult position somewhat.

"Our humor is pretty good, although joking and smiling are not of ordinary occurrence.

"My young comrades hold out better than I had ventured to hope. The fact that during the last few days we have drifted toward the south at such a rate contributes essentially, I think, to keeping up our courage."

Since the twelfth they have drifted not less than forty-five miles south-southeastward. The average speed has been about 1.2 miles per hour. In consequence, Andree writes:

"Possibly we may be able to drive far southward quickly enough, and obtain our nourishment from the sea. Perhaps, too, it will not be so cold on the sea as on land. He who lives will see. Now it is time to work."

White Island
Appears to Explorers as One Block of Ice

The day has been made remarkable by the additional fact that:

"We have seen land for the first time since the 11th of July. It is undoubtedly New Iceland that we have before our eyes."

(New Iceland is White Island.)

In the forenoon of September 17, they take the bearings of the island, of which Andree makes a drawing. The island is estimated to be six miles distant.

"Large glacier blocks are visible in front of and along the glacier. The upper border is very even, and the arching of the island not broken by any tops. Its appearance is shown by the appended drawing.

"There is no question of our attempting to go on shore there, for the entire island seems to be one single block of ice with glacier-towers. But it seems to be not altogether inaccessible on the east and west points.

"We saw a bear under the land, and in the water I saw a couple of flocks of those black guillemot youngsters.

"Our arrival at New Iceland is remarkable, because it points to a colossal drift, viz., of more than one degree of latitude (1.15 miles) since September 12. If we drift in this way some weeks more, perhaps we may save ourselves on one of the islands of Spitzbergen.

"It makes us feel anxious that we have not any more game within shooting distance. Our provisions must soon be supplemented—and richly—if we are to hold out."

Festal Day
King Oscar's Anniversary Celebrated

They see nothing around them but a couple of auks, ivory gulls—ten at a time—and seals. The latter "were greatly afraid." No walrus appears, and the water seems poor in small animals, for dragging with the landing-net proves fruitless.

In Sweden on September 18, the twenty-fifth anniversary of the ascension of King Oscar II to the throne was celebrated:

"Jubilee Day was a lucky day for us," Andree wrote. "The weather was beautiful, and our work went on quickly.

"I succeeded in shooting another seal, this time with small shot. He was not quite dead, but we got him.

"Afraid that he would give out all his breath at the last minute and go to the bottom, I gave him a second small-shot cartridge in the back at very close quarters. The small shots were found afterward between the blubber and the flesh and, consequently, had not had any deadly—if even damaging—effect.

"Then I cut up the seal and found among other things that the bones of the skull are as thin as eggshell, so that it should be possible to kill a seal easily with small shot in the head.

"Of the inner parts of the seal we have now eaten the following: the brain, the intestines, liver, lungs, meat, blubber, kidneys, heart, stomach, contents of stomach and blood.

"We had the Swedish flag hoisted, and finished the day with a ceremonial meal."

(The banquet menu, which was recorded in Strindberg's log book, appears in another column.)

"The general feeling was one of the greatest pleasure, and we lay down contented.

"We had had New Iceland in sight all day west of us, and had thus drifted to its eastern side. The upper contour of the island was rounded like a loaf from that side, too, and the shore consisted of the edge of a glacier. We were within 1,100 to 2,200 yards of this edge.

"Strindberg measured the height of the island and took the bearings of its southern and northern points to be able to determine, by taking new bearings the next day, if they had drifted.

Pleasing Diet
Pancake Does Not Produce Loathing

"Sunday, the nineteenth. Yesterday seems to have been the first link in a series of jubilee days, for we have succeeded in increasing our supply of provisions so much that it will last until the close of February. I managed to shoot two seals with small shot (No. .00) and one great seal (with ball).

"I cannot describe how glad I felt and how pleased my comrades seemed to be, and how they looked forward to the future with hopes considerably strengthened. The greater part of the day we were busy cutting up the seals and storing the blood—a very important part, for we have found that Fraenkel can make excellent blood pancake of seal-blood (10½ oz.), sulfat (5¼-oz., cut into small pieces) and 1 oz. flour with a pinch of salt and a pinch of yeast powder.

"In addition, we have discovered that the weight of this mixture is not notably diminished in the frying as in the case of meat, the cooked weight of which is reduced by one-third from the raw weight.

"Finally, the pancake does not produce that loathing which Strindberg and I experienced the first few days we ate seal-meat and blubber. It seems as though the pancake supplies the want of bread to a certain extent.

"The best variation, however, is given by the ivory gulls, of which today Fraenkel has shot one and Strindberg four with two shots.

House-Building
Strindberg Kept Busy With Construction

"We still drift, but slowly, for today we still have New Iceland in sight, our bearings for the day being, on the average, N. and W. for the different extremities. It presents a charming view in the sunshine, which illumines the glacier both from the edge and from above, thus giving the island the appearance of being transparent.

"The edge of the glacier contains very blue glacier ice, and also brown sections. Of surface moraines there is no trace, and the only dark patches one can discover are shadows. These, with the general formation, show that the ground beneath the glacier is not altogether level.

"Large glaciers float around the island or stand there aground. We photographed the island.

"Strindberg has been very busy house-building, in accordance with a method he has invented. This consists of mixing snow and fresh water, after which the entire mass is built up into a wall and allowed to freeze. The work is both solid and neat. In a couple of days we probably shall have the baking-oven (i. e., the sleeping room) ready."

The wind has now swung round to southerly, but the temperature has fallen to 21.6 degrees F. At 3 o'clock in the afternoon it is clear enough to allow Strindberg to take a place-determination.

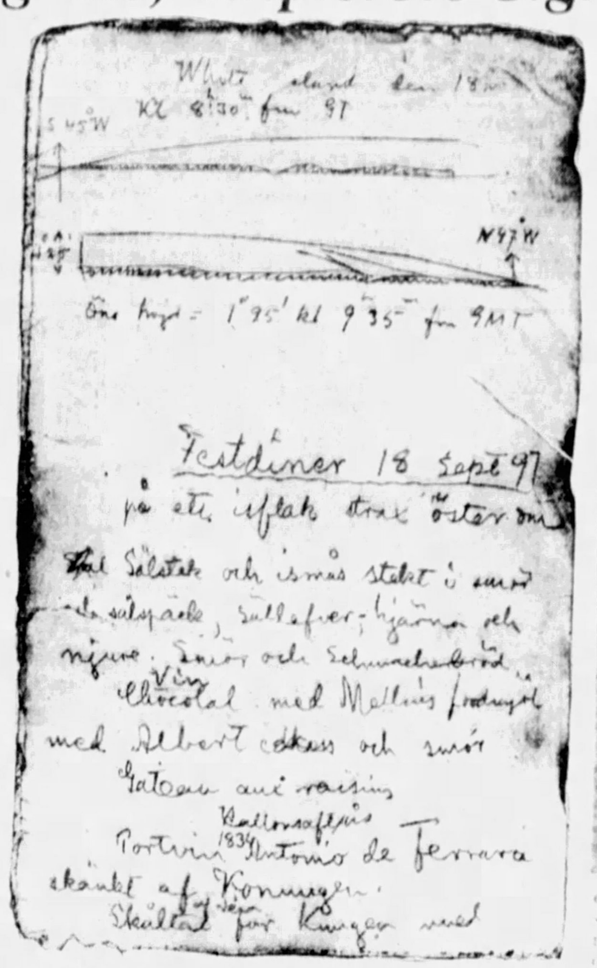
Another instalment of this dramatic narrative will appear in next Sunday's issue.



RECORD OF THE FEAST—Two pages from Strindberg's log-book with sketches of White Island and a brief account of the banquet with which the ill-fated explorers commemorated the twenty-fifth anniversary of King Oscar II's accession to the throne of Norway and Sweden, described in the accompanying instalment. A translation of the menu shown here appears in an adjoining column.

A Remarkable Banquet

One of the most remarkable banquets in honor of a reigning monarch was that held on the Arctic ice pack on September 18, 1897, by members of the Andree expedition. That day was the twenty-fifth anniversary of King Oscar II's accession to the throne of Sweden and Norway, then united. Throughout King Oscars realm on that day commemorative festivals were being held at which his health and the prosperity of his reign were being toasted. But none was more sincere or dramatic than that of the three aeronauts, grimly struggling across the polar floes toward land and safety.

King Oscar was one of the leading patrons of the Andree expedition, and on that festal day Andree and his companions did not forget to salute him, particularly with a bottle of ancient port he had presented to them.

The record of their celebration appears in today's instalment. Stringberg records the menu of the ice banquet in his log book, a facsimile of which appears herewith. A translation of this record follows:

BANQUET, 18 SEPT., '97,
On an Ice Floe, Immediately East of ——.

Seal Steak and Ivory Gull, fried in Butter and Seal Blubber.
Seal Liver, Brain and Kidney.
Butter and Schumacher Bread.
WINE.
Chocolate with Mellin's Food Flour and Albert Biscuits and Butter.
Gateau aux Raisin. Raspberry Syrup Sauce.
Port Wine, 1834, Antonio de Ferrara, given by the King.
Speech by Andree for the King, with Royal Hurrah!
National Anthem in Unison.
Biscuits, Butter, Cheese. A Glass of Wine.

Festive Feeling.
During the day the Union flag floated above the camp.

A Wonderful Picture

Eleven months after Andree had written his first lines describing White Island, a Swedish expedition under the leadership of A. G. Nathorst passed the island along almost the same path as that over which the Andree explorers drifted. Nathorst gave the following account of the island—whose secret none then dreamed of—which is in entire agreement with that of Andree's:

On the morning of August 18 there was visible forward a peculiar vaulted light, which seemed to resemble land, but we had been so often deceived that, at first, we did not know what to believe.

In the forenoon, however, this patch of light seemed to be really like land and was then photographed by Hamburg; we thought it was Kjeldsen's White Island at the base of which there is visible a glacier.

Afterward the weather became misty and now the glacier had the appearance of actual land, far away, while the vault of light, then, should be the clouds above it. But when it cleared up still more it turned out that our first opinion was correct and wonderful was the picture that appeared before our eyes.

We had in front of us a dazzling white island, rounded like a shield, consisting entirely of snow-covered glacier-ice which on the shore terminated in a perpendicular glacier-foot. Not a single mountain-top lifted itself above the covering of ice. The ice was dazzling white from its summit to its foot. It was as though one had caught a glimpse of the Antarctic continent, although in miniature.

A bank of mist lay the whole time over the island, the highest part of which was lost in the cloud, without allowing any definite distinction to be drawn between the two.

Once or twice, the sun shone through the openings in the clouds above the white covering, and the small dazzling white patches told us that the view of the whole island in clear weather must be indescribably magnificent. But I am afraid that this seldom occurs. Today, the weather was winter-like, with gusts of snow.

We went up toward the island, following the east coast northward. Here and there immense fissures were visible in the ice, which allowed us to surmise that the underlying rock was uneven. The glacier-foot was equally precipitous everywhere and no landing could be thought of.

HONORED AMID POLAR WASTES—King Oscar II, of Norway and Sweden, the twenty-fifth anniversary of whose reign was celebrated by the members of the Andree expedition while they struggled for existence on drifting ice amid the encroaching perils of the Arctic.

Eckener to Command Zeppelin in Search for London-San Francisco Polar Air Route service across the north polar regions."

It was during Capt. Eckener's visit to Russia with the Graf Zeppelin, the professor explained, that proposals were made for a Zeppelin trial trip to the neighborhood of these colonies this year.

"One of the chief difficulties of Arctic aerial travel will be the heavy mists and fogs through which one can see only a few feet ahead of the ship," said Prof. Schmidt. "These, combined with darkness that lasts for six months of each year, form a problem, more serious than the cold.

"A compass is of little use under such conditions and so near the magnetic pole. It is proposed to work with radio, and the establishment of these two radio stations is the first step."

Four stations must be built along the proposed route of passenger travel. They will have mooring masts, fuel supplies, provisions and boats.

The proposed route will pass a little south of the pole. The safety stations contemplated would be at Spitzbergen, on Franz Josef Land and Serge Kamenev Island, and somewhere in Alaska.

It will be necessary to build new Zeppelins especially adapted to the northern climate for the trans-Arctic line. At present the fate of the whole idea hinges on the outcome of the experimental trip this year.

Prof. Schmidt was enthusiastic over the project and explained at length, illustrating with a map. We were seated in his office at the Soviet Encyclopedia Bureau. He is still a young man, only 39. He wears a luxuriant beard and a mane of curly hair. His eyes are bright blue.

He has commanded the ice-breaker Sedov on two trips. The expedition of 1929 established the first colony of Franz Josef Land, leaving seven colonists for one year.

In 1930, the ice-breaker took a new set of colonists to Franz Josef Land. It took off the seven members who had lived without a quarrel or serious illness through the long polar night. A first Arctic radio station was built at the camp and is now functioning.

The main purpose of the 1930 expedition was to visit the coast of Central Siberia far within the Arctic circle, where the new northern archipelago was discovered.

In a little hut built by sixty on Serge Kamenev Island, four men were left with provisions and 40 dogs. They plan to stick it out for two years. Only their radio binds them to the world.

REAL ESTATE and BUILDING

TAX PROBLEM DISCUSSED AT REALTY MEET

Modernization of State and Local Tax Systems Urged By Prominent Realtors

A consolidation of the whole present notable movement for the modernization of state and local tax systems and preparedness to meet a coming new business cycle with its expectations for real estate were main matters of concern before the recent annual business meeting of the national association in St. Petersburg, Fla.

The action of the convention and the ideas brought out by the leading convention speakers include the following.

PRESENTS PLAN

Philip W. Kniskern, of New York, chairman of the special committee appointed six months ago by the appraisal division of the national association to work on such a plan, presented a tentative set-up. The executive committee of the division voted to continue the committee, giving to the membership opportunity to study the plans and instructed the committee to report upon it again at the coming annual convention of the association to be held in Baltimore, Md., in June.

Prof. Simeon E. Leland of the University of Chicago, who is in charge of the detail research now being carried on at the initiative of the National Association of Real Estate Boards, made a preliminary report of what that research has disclosed. He further outlined four principles to be kept in mind in all attempts at decreasing tax costs or modernization of tax systems.

CITE INTERFERENCE

Judge Arthur J. Lacy of Detroit, chairman of the property owners' division of the national association, which for the first time is bringing together the real estate owners of the United States to work with the real estate boards in a concentrated program for tax modernization, emphasized the degree to which the overlapping governmental units and obsolete small governmental units are piling up the tax costs unnecessarily and are at the same time making the real local self-government less efficient.

The state council of the association, made up of the direct representatives of the real estate boards in each of the states, discussed plans and procedures which may be best followed by the State Real Estate Associations in assisting their local membership boards to organize the property owners' division, such as have already been organized in more than 70 cities.

VIRGINIA MANOR MODEL SOLD

SOUTHERN COLONIAL. — Arthur L. Schiel, H. J. Heinz Company executive, has bought this home from the Southern Hills Land Company. T. W. Stevenson & Co., realtors, closed the deal. The model home was sponsored by the Sun-Telegraph. It is located at Midway road and Parker drive in the heart of Mt. Lebanon.

BUILDERS SELL MODEL HOME

The sale of Virginia Manor's model home, Midway road and Parker drive, to Arthur L. Schiel, H. J. Heinz executive, has been announced by T. W. Stevenson & Co., brokers.

The sale is regarded by Pittsburgh realtors as one of the most important home sales made in recent months.

The house, which was sponsored by the Sun-Telegraph and constructed by the Southern Hills Land Company, is of Southern colonial design in all details, a true representation of the mansion houses of the large manors throughout the South before the Civil War.

Among the many distinguished features of the model home is the large high columned porch running the entire front of the house. Other features of interest are tile roof in the color and shape of oak shingles, copper flashing, heavy, reinforced walls, interior finish in solid gum throughout, cloth covered nails, kitchen sink done in German silver and fireproof garage adjoining the home.

The house is located on a site commanding a wide view of the district.

Housing Association Says Repairs, Paint Will Not Jump Taxes

The Pittsburgh Housing Association is sending a bulletin to agencies and individuals interested in repairing and cleaning up properties in Pittsburgh, saying that they need not fear increased assessments as a result of their work.

The association has consulted Thomas C. McMahon, chief city assessor, who said that general necessary repairs, painting and cleaning is not a basis for increased assessment. Only important alterations or additions that obviously add to the value of a property are used as a basis for increasing tax assessments.

SHOW DECLINE IN FINANCING

CHICAGO, Jan. 24.—New first mortgage real estate bond, note and stock financing during the year of 1930 aggregated but $192,537,000, a decrease of 64 per cent from 1929, and the lowest volume since 1922, according to the annual realty investment review of Nelson, Hunt & Co., of Chicago.

Statistics compiled in the review showed that this drastic decline in the volume of real estate financing during the past year was due to a decrease of $240,000,000 in the total of new bond offerings, and a loss of nearly $100,000,000 in stock issues.

Real Estate Board To Hear Lauffman

H. B. Lauffman, of the H. J. Heinz Company, will be the speaker at the weekly luncheon meeting of the Pittsburgh Real Estate Board next Tuesday in the William Penn Hotel.

He will talk on the value of the "M. O. Book in Business." This book is founded on a code of ethics drafted by H. J. Heinz regarding their moral obligations in dealing with employes and the public.

Largest Apartment Dedicated in Vienna

An apartment house which is said to be the largest in the world has recently been completed and dedicated in Vienna, according to a report received in the Department of Commerce from De Forest Spencer, assistant commercial attache at Vienna. The structure provides room for 1,382 apartments and is sufficiently large to house 5,000 people.

Stotler Announces Mortgage Report

According to the report of C. C. Stotler, secretary of the Title Guaranty Company, there were 339 mortgages amounting to $1,860,893.04 placed on record from January 15 to and including January 21. Twenty-one of these, amounting to $126,319.91, were purchase money mortgages.

Three hundred and eighteen mortgages, totaling $1,734,573.13, were straight mortgages.

Old Wall Built by Jefferson Still Good

America's first serpentine wall of record was built under the direction of Thomas Jefferson at the University of Virginia, near Charlottesville, about 150 years ago. It was a single thickness of common brick, laid flatly, in a natural lime mortar, and ays of its sweep being rather elongated and delightfully proportioned. It was a decided innovation in its day and, yet, stands virtually unimpaired, an excellent testimony to permanence of masonry construction and a protracted exposure to the elements.

REAL ESTATE CITED AS BUY

The working man has but two ways to join the well-to-do class of citizen, either by systematic saving or by buying from pessimists real estate and the securities based on it.

This was the unanimous opinion voiced simultaneously by 400 banquet speakers in 40 different states at the recent country-wide centennial celebration of the United States Building and Loan League. The banquet marked the one hundredth anniversary of the founding of the first building and loan association in America in Frankford, Pa.

The particular value of the systematic savings route was pointed out by each of the banquet speakers, and their opinion was confirmed by a telegram from Col. Arthur Woods, chairman of the President's Emergency Committee on Unemployment.

The economic contribution made by members of the United States Building and Loan League in the past century is evidenced by 8,000,000 American homes built during that period and by a high standard of living which the activities of building and loan associations with their systematic savings plan have helped to elevate to its present status, according to Col. Woods.

HOME OWNING NOT RESERVED

Home ownership is not reserved for the rich or even for the near rich, according to the stories submitted in the "How I Got My Home" contest being conducted by the National Association of Real Estate Boards.

The bulk of these stories come from people engaged in trades and occupations not usually associated with home owning, and how they have done it on tiny incomes surprised the contest judges who are reviewing the letters.

Medical Building Scheduled to Open May 1, Donovan Says

The Medical Arts Building, Fifth avenue and Atwood street, which is rapidly nearing completion, will be ready for occupancy May 1, according to James P. Donovan, agent.

The building will be five stories high, with accommodations for 125 tenants, not including those who will occupy the 10 storerooms on the first floor. The tenants will be physicians and dentists of high professional standing.

WORK SOUGHT FOR BUILDERS

An appeal to building material dealers throughout the United States to help reduce unemployment in the home construction field by hiring idle building tradesmen to make a house to house canvass for repair and remodeling business among all homes owners has been issued by C. E. Stedman, vice chairman of the National Industries Bureau.

APPRAISERS TO BE CERTIFIED

A proposal to create a method through which qualified real estate appraisers could be certified as such will come before the National Association of Real Estate Boards at its annual meeting, to be held in St. Petersburg, Fla., January 15, 16 and 17. The proposal will come before the meeting in a report to be made to the executive committee of the Appraisal Division by Philip W. Kniskern, of New York.

Production of 'Blue Bird,' Lectures and Art Exhibits Keep Junior League Busy

One of the busiest organizations in social realms is the Junior League, with its plans for the production of Maeterlinck's "Blue Bird" on February 19, 20 and 21 at the Nixon, its art exhibits, its notable lectures from time to time.

Outstanding among their lecturers is Count Rene d'Harnoncourt, here with the Mexican Art Exhibit being shown now at Carnegie Institute.

On Tuesday afternoon, February 3, at 2:30 o'clock, Count d'Harnoncourt will talk to the League members on the topic, "The Gay Saints of Mexico."

More and more committees are being named for the Maeterlinck play. Mrs. James I. Marsh, of Wallingford street, is chairman of tickets, with Betty Wells as vice chairman. Mrs. Marsh is expected home the first of February from Lake Placid to take charge of the ticket sale.

Christine McKelvy is chairman of the program, with Mary Carroll as chairman of program advertising. Assisting them are ever so many members of the younger set.

The Pittsburgh aides include Mrs. Roberdeau Green Annan, Mrs. Samuel Clarke Reed, Jr., Mrs. Sidney A. Stewart, Elinor Munroe, Virginia Wright, Wilhelmina Balken, Betty Dunlap, Louise Schleiter, Barbara Yohe and Virginia Forsyth.

Nancy Hamilton is chairman for Sewickley, with Mrs. William Dudley Livingston, the former Jane Edson, Mrs. J. C. Chaplin III, Anne and Margaret Rose, Katherine Collin and Priscilla Brown as aides.

On Tuesday morning at 10 o'clock in the Pittsburgh Golf Club tryouts will be held under the direction of Gloria Chandler, who is coaching the play for the League throughout the East. Mrs. Joseph M. Scribner is general chairman of the play.

"Coffees" Replacing Teas — Men Don White Dress Suits

Have you heard—

That the latest thing in sartorial perfection for men at Palm Beach this winter is the white linen dress suit?

That a new form of entertainment down in Washington is "a coffee"? And the menu for this social diversion includes coffee, of course, often tiny biscuits with ham between, doughnuts, and all sorts of fancy rolls and buns.

Benefits, Plays, Weddings Among Social Activities To Occupy Stay-at-Homes

By PATRICIA PITT.

This winter everyone's going to have a pleasant time, I believe. Those who'll go away to Europe, to Florida, or to the West will have all the delights of travel, of meeting new people, of tropical sunshine. And those who are remaining here, and this year there are going to be more stay-at-homes than ever, are having lots of sunshine, too, the warmest winter imaginable, and all sorts of things to do.

There will be benefit affairs, there will be weddings galore with their preliminary entertainments, there will be amateur dramatics. And with so many people in town, goodness knows how many more intriguing things will be arranged.

A group of younger folks down in Sewickley, who belong to the Sewickley Cot Club, will come to town on February 19 to produce a one-act play, the third on the program for the Stage and Play Society that night in the Twentieth Century Club.

The play is "The Kite," by Holland Hudson, directed by Lucy Haworth and Mrs. George P. Rose, honorary president of the Cot Club players. Mrs. James S. Todd, the president, is out of town.

Sail for Indies

The players are Barbara Irwin, Nancy Craig and Martha Leggate, three of the debutantes of the year; Mrs. R. W. Boobyer, William Leigh, Alvin C. Haworth, David Crossan Chaplin, Charles A. Woods, Jr., and Henry Gilette Colby.

Members of the Stage and Play Society will give Carroll Fitzhugh's "Squaring the Triangle" and Barrie's "Seven Women."

Of course those staying at home are interested in the plans of their traveling friends. Among those seeking even sunnier skies are the W. G. Costins, who sailed yesterday for

Pittsburgh Society Folk in Ever Increasing Number Help Enliven Winter Resorts in Southland

No matter how attractive winter may be in the north, everyone likes to hear about what folks are doing in the gay resorts of sun-drenched Florida.

From Palm Beach, Miami Beach, St. Petersburg and many other "beaches" in Florida comes news of the arrival of Pittsburghers, of teas and dances.

Among the most recent arrivals at Palm Beach are Mrs. Maitland Alexander, her debutante daughter, Madelaine, and Mrs. Alexander Laughlin, who arrived on their private car to join the Rev. Dr. Alexander at "White House," the Alexanders' Florida place. On Monday night Madelaine was honored here in Pittsburgh with a theater party Dr. and Mrs. Robert Milligan gave in the Nixon for 300 guests, followed by a supper in the Milligan's North Side home.

The Alexanders will take a prominent part in the social life of the resort, entertaining frequently on their yacht, "The Viator."

Mrs. Henry R. Rea, of Sewickley Heights, will entertain members of the Current Events Class in "Lagomar," her Palm Beach villa, on February 18. Randolph Churchill, son of Winston S. Churchill, will speak on "Why I am Not a Socialist." A tea will follow.

A much-entertained member of the younger set in Palm Beach is one of Pittsburgh's debutantes, Helen Louise Tunnell, daughter of the E. Paul Tunnells, who is the guest of her aunt, Miss Lilian Washburn Newlin, of Newport, Baltimore and New York.

On Tuesday Mrs. L. B. Cuddy, of Sewickley, and Mrs. Joseph Speidel, of Wheeling, W. Va., entertained at the weekly card party of the Bethesda-by-the-Sea philanthropic organization.

Mrs. Frederick G. Kay is occupying her new colonial house at Palm Beach. Mrs. Kay divides her time between the Schenley Apartments and "Hidden River Farm," her son's estate at Chester, N. J. Mrs. Kay and Mrs. Alfred G. Kay have been the guests of Mrs. J. L. Ketterlinus in St. Augustine for a few days.

Brides-Elect Much Entertained As Prelude to Two Brilliant Nuptial Events of Late Winter

Outstanding among the brilliant weddings of late January and early February will be the marriage of Marjorie Copley Stoner and John Henry Painter on Thursday, and that of Mary Robinson Oliver and William Christopher Robinson, Jr., on February 2.

Before the wedding march is heard there'll be a series of entertainments for the bridal parties, out-of-town guests and friends.

Majorie, who is the daughter of Edmund Curtis Stoner, of Sewickley, and Mr. Painter, who is the son of Mrs. John Henry Painter and the late Judge Painter, of Kittanning, will be married at noon in the home of the bride's uncle and aunt, the Martin Lawrence Moores, of Sewickley, with only the immediate families and a few intimate friends present. The Rev. Dr. Owen D. Odell will be the officiant.

Following a small wedding breakfast Mr. Painter and his bride will leave for a West Indian cruise, and after February 15 they will be at home in Fairmont, W. Va.

Marjorie is a graduate of Hollins' College, Virginia, and studied a year at the Chateau de Dammartin in France; her fiance prepared at Phillips Andover, and is a graduate of Yale, class of 1919.

Early this week many entertain-

Josephine Hulse to Marry H. M. Curry, II, on Tuesday

Tuesday will bring another wedding, that of Josephine Hulse, of Hutchinson, Kan., and Henry Milo Curry II, son of the Charles Henry Currys, of Coraopolis Heights, to take place in Kansas. The Currys left yesterday for Kansas with their son, Charles H. Curry, Jr., who will be his brother's best man. The bride has many friends here.

Secrets of Artists' and Adsters' Frolic Are Revealed

Garden of Golden Apple Setting to Be Carried Out in Edenesque Style

By MRS. CHARLES M. BREGG

At the risk of incurring the everlasting displeasure of friends in the Woman's Advertising Club we are going to tell a secret or two about the annual Artists' and Adsters' Friske Frolic which the club is giving next Friday night in the William Penn Hotel. That is, a secret or two about the decorations.

As everybody knows by this time, the setting is to be the very poetic sounding "Garden of the Golden Apple," so named by that unbeatable pair, Betty Bell and Mary Hulsman, and the idea, of course, is Edenesque.

There's to be a giant apple tree, a sort of Adam of Trees, on which will hang the golden fruit and then there are to be a lot of little Cain and Abel trees too, if one is to judge from the whisperings that are going about among the committee members.

Guard Secrets

You can't get any of the girls to give away the secret completely, but there's a great deal of talk in discreet, safe tones of "golden parasols," and putting two and two together the eavesdropper gathers that these great canopies are to be hung with smilax and more golden apples and that some of the apples will hold favors and some others will be for the sole purpose of being tossed about in the general glee that is expected to pervade the affair.

Antoinette Bittner, who is most optimistic and sanguine in the matter of her publicity adjectives, is tempted to such descriptions as "glamorous," "splendorous," "enthralling," "rapturous," and she even falls into the use of the old-fashioned form of address in her enthusiasm.

"Glamorous Gaiety"

Bear with Antoinette a moment, remembering that it is HER ball and that it comes, like Christmas, but once a year. Here's a sample of Antoinette's enthusiastic outbursts:

"The Artists and Adsters Friske Frolic — those magic words that once a year open wide the portals of Bohemia to the jaded public! Hast thou seen the lights burning brightly in attic rooms? Ah, 'tis the advertising writers of Pittsburgh wrinkling their brows over a clever jumbling of words for thee. Verily, they have toiled hard and long into the night so that thou, Tired Business Man and Tired Business Woman, may for one brief moment dispel thy worries and cast aside thy cares to come rollicking, frollicking and bask in the glamorous gaiety of the Adsters and Artists costume ball."

There are plans for a pantomime depicting the rise and fall of the apple. Headliners from local theaters will add to the entertainment. The costumes, of course, will be of chief interest, and these are to be judged for their beauty, their originality, their cleverness, their grotesqueness and their aptness by Quin Hall, of the Sun-Telegraph; Jerry Cullison, advertising specialist; Cy Hungerford, of the Post-Gazette, and Ralph Reichhold, of the Press.

Invitations Beautiful

Beautiful invitations have been done by Hazel M. Fahnestock's clever pen in carmine, gold and jet.

Under the general chairmanship of Betty Bell, of whom the publicity chairman speaks as "gill-size Betty," the frolic committees are: Reception, Helen Ryman and other committee chairmen; printing, Mary Marshall Welch; prizes, Maude Cummings; decorations and posters, Martha Hunt Morris, assisted by Velma Lindway Caputo, Grace Mills and Mildred D. Underwood, in decorations, and Dorothy Hunt Greer, Helen Lawrence and Helen Young on posters; Katheryn Power, entertainment chairman, assisted by Antoinette Bittner and Mary Marshall Welch; Mary McKelvey, judges and favors chairman, assisted by Edith Mansmann, Alice Yarnell and Frances Darr; Edith Mansmann, invitations chairman, with Helen Lawrence, Kathleen Eiseman and Suzanne Finley assisting; Mary Eichelberger, ticket chairman, with Grace Stuart Gardner, Marjorie Hewitt and Alice Yarnell as aides and Frances Howell, Mary Hulsman and Dora Weiss assisting Miss Bittner in publicity.

Washington Alumni Dinner on Tuesday

Mrs. Mattie L. Houghten is president of the University of Washington Alumni Association of Western Pennsylvania which will entertain with a dinner Tuesday in the College Club honoring E. C. Eastwood, head of the department of mechanical engineering at the university. Phil A. Franklin is chairman of activities for the association.

Ben Avon Y. W. C. A. To Hold Benefit

A special children's matinee is being arranged as a feature of the motion picture benefit which the Ben Avon Chapter of the Young Women's Christian Association will give Friday, February 13, in the Bellevue Theater. H. B. Warner in "The Princess and the Plumber" is the feature attraction.

INCIDENTALLY

She's looking a little wan, to be sure, but it's nice to have Mrs. Charles S. Hutchison back again to activities at the Congress clubhouse. Four months ago Mrs. Hutchison was injured in a motor accident.

Pittsburgh Chapter, Daughters of the American Revolution, gives a dinner at the Workshop for the Blind every Friday, and has for its honor guests the workers whose birthday anniversaries fall nearest the day. Some of them have never had any other birthday party in all their lives.

The employment committee of the Council of Jewish Women furnishes young girls to care for small children or to do other small duties as "mothers' helpers."

Ida Bowman To Address Friday Club

Ida Wright Bowman comes back to Pittsburgh this week for the second of her three lectures before the Friday Morning Club of the League of Women Voters. Mrs. Bowman will discuss political current events at 10:30 Friday in Carnegie Music Hall.

The Twelfth Ward League will meet at the Lemington School tomorrow, with Mrs. W. H. Judge as leader. The subject of discussion will be "Penal Institutions in Pennsylvania," with the following speakers: Mrs. M. C. Parker, on "Jails;" Miss Mary Lang, on "Penitentiaries," and Mrs. M. Morgan, on "Reformatories."

On Tuesday afternoon, in the art room of the West View High School, the West View group of women voters will be addressed by Mrs. Leon Falk, on "Does Every Child in Pennsylvania Have an Equal Chance?" Mrs. Elizabeth B. Motz, organizer and teacher of political education for the league, will address the Thirteenth Ward group on Tuesday night at the home of Mrs. J. W. Hugus, Susquehanna street, on "What and Why You Should Know About Taxes."

The Twenty-fifth Ward League will hold its monthly meeting Tuesday at the Y. M. C. A., North avenue. A review of "Woman Suffrage and Politics," by Carrie Chapman Catt, will be given, and Miss Clarissa Moffett will speak on the Edmonds Act.

Wednesday afternoon the Wilkinsburg branch of the league will meet at the Y. W. C. A. with "Courts" as the discussion subject.

The Thirty-second Ward will hold its meeting at the Municipal Building Wednesday night, when Mrs. Motz will speak on "City Government and the 1931 Budget."

The Swissvale unit will meet at the Wilkins School on January 30, and Mrs. Motz will speak on the "Tariff."

Dr. Durham to Talk Before Health Club

The meeting of the Pittsburgh Health Club, to be addressed on Tuesday evening by Dr. Alfred Duke Durham, is open without admission to the public. It will be held in Utility Hall, with Dr. Durham speaking on "Preventive Medicine." The speaker is a past president of the club and of the Western Pennsylvania Osteopathic Association and is a member of the advisory board of the Defensive Diet League of America.

FLYING SINGER

GRACE SEETON MAYER, soprano-aviatrix, will sing Tuesday afternoon at the meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary to the Allegheny County Medical Society in the Keystone Athletic Club. J. Fred Lissfelt, music critic of the Sun-Telegraph, is on the program for a talk concerning the Oberammergau Passion Play. Photo by Frank Turgeon, Jr.

Club Groups Of Aspinwall To Give Play

The evening and music departments of the Aspinwall Woman's Club are combining in presenting "The College Flapper" with a cast of 150 persons on Wednesday and Thursday evenings. And not content with an undertaking of this size, they have added a baby pageant which will precede the play and in which another 100 or so persons of a younger growth will participate.

The "big evening" will take place in the high school auditorium. In the cast of the "Flapper" are Albert Bolton, Jr., Rosella Helbling, John Palmer, Gordon Stuart, Mrs. T. S. Dickey, William McCann, Louise Schillo, Lee Grazt, George Robie, Jennie McMorran, George Gallagher, Paul Noble and Katherine Eisengart, who have the leading roles.

J. Edward Beachler will lead glee club singing and there is to be a business men's "flapper chorus" made up of the men of the community, while more than 25 high school girls will compose the choruses. The high school orchestra under the baton of F. D. Keboch, superintendent of schools, will furnish music prior to the performance.

Wilkinsburg Club Sews for Blind

The Wednesday Afternoon Club of Wilkinsburg was entertained last week at the home of Mrs. W. B. Covil, Jr., Hill avenue. Leader of the afternoon was Mrs. John Ralston and the subject was "The Missionary Movement of the Christian Church," on which a fine paper was prepared by Mrs. H. H. Jenpewine. The women met an hour earlier than usual and spent the time sewing for the blind.

Welsh Club Women Meet On Thursday

Mrs. A. C. Vaughan, of Cleveland, national president of the Women's Welsh Clubs of America, and Miss Margaret Gwyer, of Pittsburgh, national first vice president, will share honors at the luncheon which is to be a feature of the district meeting of the club on Thursday in the Hotel Schenley. The Homestead and McKeesport clubs are the hostess groups, and Mrs. Levi Thomas and Mrs. Jane Matthews, the respective presidents, are chairmen for the day. Miss Ethel M. Edwards, vocalist, will furnish music for both morning and afternoon sessions.

Colloquium Club To Meet Tomorrow

Mrs. William S. Van Dyke will be hostess to the Colloquium Club tomorrow at her home in Sheridan avenue. Assisting her will be Mrs. John M. Sherrer, Mrs. Clarence M. Wolff and Mrs. Clark M. George. The speaker will be Dr. L. M. Herrington, who will bring to the club his impressions of Soviet Russia, which country the club is studying this year.

MISS ANITA BLOCK, foreign play reader for the Theater Guild, will tell the Pittsburgh Section, National Council of Jewish Women, "What We Want in the Theater" when the section meets Tuesday afternoon in the Y. M. and W. H. A.

Lodge Groups Plan Dances, Card Parties

Among the week's lodge events is the dance which Rosebud Chapter, No. 448, Order of the Eastern Star, will have tomorrow night in the chapter room, Malta Temple, North Side.

Friends of the Officers' Club of Franklin Chapter, No. 127, O. E. S., will be guests at a card party to be held Tuesday evening in the East End O. E. S. Temple.

Star of Bethlehem Chapter, No. 103, O. E. S., has issued invitations for its twentieth anniversary party to be held Wednesday in Wilkinsburg Masonic Hall. From 2 o'clock in the afternoon until midnight a continuous program will be presented. Mrs. Carrie M. Crisswell, worthy grand matron of the state, and other state officers will be honor guests in the afternoon. The original officers will preside during the initiation ceremonies. The banquet, which is to be a feature, will be in the Second Presbyterian Church and in the evening the guests will return to the temple where there will be a reception to charter members and past officers and dancing will conclude the entertainment. Mrs. Sara C. Johnson is general chairman.

Mrs. Vietta Johns and Mrs. Annetta Frey will be hostesses at a card party in Mrs. Frey's home, Center avenue, next Friday evening as a benefit for the social fund of Mizpah Chapter, O. E. S.

In Malta Temple on Wednesday evening, Mosaic Chapter, No. 50, O. E. S., will have a card party under the chairmanship of Mrs. Marie Slack.

Loyalty Chapter, No. 343, will give a card party in Malta Temple, Tuesday evening, in charge of Mrs. Margaret Ehrenberger.

Beechwood Club Women Hear Music

Miss Miriam Schoenfield gave an enjoyable talk on "Intolerance" before the Beechview Women's Civic Club on Tuesday evening. Music was furnished by several club members with Mrs. Charles Trischler at the piano, and the social hour was arranged by the social chairman, Mrs. Mark McDonal.

Mrs. Frank Strobatz, chairman of the ways and means committee, has planned a series of bridge parties to be held at the clubhouse and for bridge breakfast and salmagundi party, March 5, when pancakes and sausages will be the menu.

The literary section, under the direction of Mrs. Rose Altwater, is rehearsing a play to be presented at the February meeting of the club. At the department's meeting at the clubhouse tomorrow current events and the American Indian will be the subjects for discussion.

Scholarship Work Praised by Graham

Praise for the work of the Sarah Sloan Scholarship Club in keeping open the paths of development to students who show marked qualities of leadership was voiced Wednesday by Dr. Ben G. Graham in an address before the club. Choosing "Leadership" as his subject, Dr. Graham said a great leader combines human sympathy, masterful intellect and the intuition to know when to seize an opportunity and turn it to advantage. Mrs. Frank Myler, contralto, with Elsie Breese Mitchell at the piano, sang a group of spirituals.

Welfare Work Topic For Homewood Club

E. S. McClelland, of the Westinghouse Company, will address the Homewood Women's Club at its meeting tomorrow afternoon, having "Industrial Welfare Work" as his subject. Mrs. George L. Carson is leader for the afternoon.

Name Bridge Patronesses At Congress

A long list of patronesses, headed by the president, Mrs. Ralph W. Johnston, has been obtained for the benefit bridge which the Congress of Clubs directors will hold Thursday afternoon in the clubhouse.

Out of the movement to raise a mortgage fund gift as a tribute to Mrs. Johnston has grown "The Five Dollar Club," to which new members are being added each week. The fund will be concluded April 1, and will be presented as a testimonial to Mrs. Johnston upon her going out of office.

At the evening department meeting tomorrow, Miss Elvera Hamstrom will give an illustrated lecture on a world cruise.

Mrs. Willis E. Fish, chairman of radio, will present Judge Sara M. Soffel during the Congress radio period on Tuesday at 1:30 over KDKA. Mrs. Fish announces "Traveling With a Purpose" as the general subject for the February radio talks.

Future events planned in the Congress are bridge benefits to be given by the bowling league on Saturday, February 14, and one by the Congress choral on Monday, February 16.

Dormont Mothers To Meet Tuesday

Tuesday night's meeting of Dormont Mothers' Club will be in charge of the child study department, of which Mrs. W. C. Lang is chairman. J. H. Lodge, superintendent of the Boys' Club of Pittsburgh, will discuss its activities and the Boys' Band will play. Mrs. James James will add readings, and Mrs. Lillian Anderson McDonald, solos.

'New Ways for Old' Lee Club's Topic

"New Ways for Old" will be discussed as the chief program feature of the Lee Community Club's meeting tomorrow in the Lee School. Mrs. Emily Andrews, of Utility Hall, is the scheduled speaker.

College Club Plans Benefit For March 2

The College Club will give a theater party on Monday evening, March 2, at the Alvin to see Grace George in "The First Mrs. Fraser." Mrs. George M. Swann and her social committee, who have charge of the benefit, will have a business luncheon at the club house Wednesday to complete their plans.

Miss Margaret Ingels, America's only woman air conditioning engineer, will address the club at the regular Friday afternoon meeting this week. Her subject is "Doing Something About the Weather."

Mrs. A. L. Pitassi is hostess for the tea hour. Mrs. Jacob Simpson Payton and Mrs. Alexander P. Reed will preside at the table and the assistants are Mrs. Earl F. Reed, Mrs. J. Reynolds Pierpoint, Mrs. William M. Patterson and Mrs. O. B. Opsion.

On Tuesday, at 3 o'clock, Mrs. Helen Glenn Tyson will review "A Preface to Morals," by Walter Lippman, for the general readers' group. Mrs. John A. Blair will be hostess for the tea hour following this lecture, and will be assisted by Mrs. Edith B. Maize, Mrs. H. Lee Briney, Mrs. Thomas MacKennan and Mrs. W. D. Stewart.

Busy Season For Society Folk Here

Harana. Virginia Drake, debutante daughter of the J. Frank Drakes, who has just recovered from an operation for appendicitis, and Cherry Ross, of New York, will sail Wednesday for the West Indies. And they'll not be back until after Easter.

Also going to the West Indies are Mrs. James Reed, Jr., and her daughter, Frances, who sailed Friday. And sailing away for a cruise of the Mediterranean is Virginia Furey, a member of the younger set.

And now that the formal social season is over many folks are visiting families and relatives. Mrs. George Phelps Rose has as her guests now her two daughters, Mrs. John M. Kimball, of Portland, and Mrs. James W. Benning, of British Columbia.

Names Attendants

Mary Frances Palmer, daughter of the George O. Palmers, of Miami Beach, Fla., who'll become the bride of Frederick G. Bannerot, Jr., son of the Frederick G. Bannerots, of the Schenley Apartments, on February 17, has chosen her bridal party. The wedding is to take place at 8:30 o'clock in the evening in the Miami Beach Community Church with the Rev. Joseph M. Taylor officiating, assisted by the Rev. Elisha A. King.

Mary's aunt, Mrs. Bascom Headen Palmer, will be the matron of honor. The bridesmaids will be Katherine Swearingen, of Bartow, Fla.; Virginia Claire Lannigan, of Charlottesville, Va.; Elizabeth Hardy and Lyra Burwell, of Miami. The flower girls will be Nancy and Sally Palmer.

Charles E. Hayward, Jr., of New York, will be the best man, and the ushers will include A. Hamilton Cline III, of Pittsburgh; William Hier Knowles, Jr., of Pensacola, Fla.; George P. Harrington, of New York, and Dr. Bascom Headen Palmer.

There will be a reception after the wedding, in the home of the Palmers in Miami Beach.

Mrs. McKaig Weds

Mrs. James Morris Morgan, of Washington, announces the marriage of her daughter, Mrs. Donald McKaig, to Moorhead B. Holland, son of the Rev. Dr. and Mrs. William J. Holland, of Forbes street, which took place in Mrs. McKaig's home Wednesday evening, with Dr. Holland officiating.

Sets Wedding Day

March 24 will be the wedding day of Mary Lane Van Cleve, daughter of Mrs. J. Spencer Van Cleve, of Erie, and Allen K. Shenk, son of Mrs. Wilbur Shenk, of Ellsworth avenue. The ceremony will take place in the Van Cleve home, with a reception in the Kahkwa Country Club in Erie.

Nancy Van Cleve will be her sister's only attendant, and Charles Shenk will be his twin brother's best man.

Miss Rial Betrothed

Announcement has been made of the betrothal of Elizabeth Melissa Rial, daughter of Senator William Smith Rial, of Greensburg, and Frank Philip Walthour, Jr., son of the E. P. Walthours, of Alexander avenue, Pittsburgh. Elizabeth is a graduate of Pennsylvania College for Women and is a member of the faculty of the Mount Pleasant Ramsay High School. Her fiance attended Washington and Jefferson College and the University of Cincinnati. A late spring wedding will terminate the betrothal.

Engaged in East

A betrothal of interest here is that of Helen Morgan, daughter of the Truman Spencer Morgans, of Park avenue, New York, and William Martin Young, Jr., of New York, son of the William Martin Youngs, of Sparta, Tenn.

Helen attended the Finch School in New York and Vassar College. Her fiance attended Vanderbilt University, Nashville, Tenn., and is a member of Delta Tau Delta. He is also a graduate of the Bush Conservatory of Music, Chicago.

Mr. Morgan and his family are former residents of Hampton street, Pittsburgh.

SOCIALITES NO. XVII

Drawn From Life by William R. Shulgold

Mrs. Francis H. McKnight, of Sewickley, whom Mr. Shulgold has drawn for this week, has had a most colorful life. To begin with, she was born in Florence and lived during her childhood in Naples and Constantinople.

She came to Pittsburgh and Sewickley with her father, Telesio Lucci, who was Italian consul here until the Mussolini regime, and married a Sewickley man. Now she is very busy directing the early education of her two engaging young daughters, Laura Lucci McKnight and Jeanie Baird McKnight.

Mrs. McKnight swims often in the summer at Little Sewickley Creek Swimming Pool, which the McKnights own, and takes a most active part in the Child Health Association now being reorganized in Sewickley.

She's rather tall and slender and is decidedly brunette in coloring. And she is one of the most attractive members of the younger married set. —PATRICIA PITT.

Plan Many Parties for Brides-Elect

ments will be given for them. On Tuesday Mrs. James Madison Stoner, Jr., will give a luncheon in her home, that afternoon Mrs. Martin Lawrence Moore will give a tea, and that evening Mrs. Frank R. Stoner will entertain with a buffet supper for the bride and bridegroom. On Wednesday Mrs. Mark Woodward Stoner will give a dinner for the out-of-town guests.

Arriving on Tuesday for the wedding festivities will be Lilian Hasbrouck, of New York, who will be Marjorie's guest. At the wedding the bride will have no attendants; Dwight C. Morgan, Jr., will be best man.

Mary Oliver's bridal party has been announced already. But there are a number of parties honoring her and her fiance just being made known.

On Friday evening the George H. Loves will give a dinner-dance in the home of Mrs. Love's parents, the H. H. McClintics, and on Saturday evening Mary Rhodes and her brother, Thomas E. Rhodes, will give a buffet supper in the home of their father and mother, the James Dickinson Rhodeses, of Sewickley. Later that night there'll be a dinner-dance in the Allegheny Country Club, given by John S. Laughlin, William D. George, Charles L. Bell, William Lloyd Standish III, Henry Oliver, John H. Ricketson III, James O. Flower, Frank Faber Brooks, Jr., and James Verner Scaife, Jr., all of whom will be ushers.

On next Sunday the Raymond Ford Morelands will entertain with a luncheon in the Allegheny County Club for the bridal party, and that evening the Alexander Laughlin Robinsons will entertain with a supper at Franklin Farms.

Lady Ribblesdale Ends Gotham Visit and Returns To Home in Old Albion

By CHOLLY KNICKERBOCKER,
Universal Service Society Editor.

NEW YORK, Jan. 24.

That most patrician personage, Lady Ribblesdale, brought her metropolitan visit to an end last week when, accompanied by her secretary, personal maids and no end of excess luggage, she walked up the gangplank of the Cunarder Aquitania, which carried her across the seas to England, where she has made her home for many years.

During the period when Lord Ribblesdale was alive the former Mrs. John Jacob Astor paid but few visits to Gotham.

But when Lord Ribblesdale was gathered to his fathers, Lady Ribblesdale suffered a change of heart about the U. S. A. She found life in London dull and uninteresting and at the urgent request of her son, Vincent Astor, came to New York for a short visit.

Ava Ribblesdale discovered many changes had taken place during her long absence from these shores. Changes that evidently met with her approval.

For, since that first visit, Lord Ribblesdale's still magnificent beautiful widow has been making annual trips from London to Gotham and each year her visits are of longer and longer duration.

Frequently this season I encountered the majestic Ava about in society. And, gazing at her superb "figger," handsome complexion and aristocratic head it seems almost impossible that 40 years have passed since she, as Ava Willing, of Philadelphia, became the bride of John Jacob Astor and, according to the press of that day, was the "Crown Princess of American society."

The theatrical world may have its Fanny Wards and its Edna Wallace Hoppers—society has Ava Willing Astor Ribblesdale.

Italian Girls' Club Marks Anniversary

Anne B. Watts Married in Century Club

Anne Blakeley Watts, daughter of the Robert Pitcairn Watts, of Dennistoun Avenue, was a lovely bride on Tuesday. She married William H. Robinson, Jr., son of William H. Robinson, of Beechwood Boulevard, at 4:30 o'clock in the afternoon in the Twentieth Century Club. The reception room was decorated to resemble a summer garden, bordered with tall trees and hedges. Garden statuary was used effectively and pastel spring flowers. The Rev. Dr. Asbury Krom, of Providence, R. I., was the officiating clergyman.

The bride, who was given in marriage by her father, wore a lovely gown of white satin with close-fitting sleeves of rose point and duchess lace, worn by her mother, with a peplum at the hipline extending into a long court train. Her veil of tulle rippled from a cap of old rose point, caught with orange blossoms. She carried an old-fashioned nosegay of lily of the valley, tied with a frill of rose point.

Daffodil yellow satin formed the gowns of the bridesmaids, with jackets of the same material tying at the side. Brown velvet hats and crepe slippers completed the ensemble and they carried muffs of brown velvet with a spray of yellow and deep purple orchids. The attendants included Janet McKinney, of Coraopolis Heights, and Elizabeth Jane Robinson, sister of the bridegroom. The bride's mother chose cinnamon crepe Elizabeth for her gown, with a hat of brown straw lace.

The bridegroom's brother, Thomas Armstrong Robinson, served as best man, and the ushers were Robert Speer Watt, brother of the bride; Leslie Buswell, of Gloucester, Mass., brother-in-law of the bridegroom; H. G. Veeder, Jr., James Marshall Veeder and Malcolm Macfarlane and John D. Murdock, of Winnetka, Ill.

The out-of-town guests included the bridegroom's grandmother, Mrs. J. P. Robinson, and her daughter, Miss Ida Robinson, of Curwensville, Pa.; Mrs. Leslie Buswell, of Gloucester, sister of the bridegroom; the David M. Watts, and their daughter, Elinor, of South Orange, N. J.; the George H. Coughlins, of Merion, Pa., and their daughter, Eleanor C. Watt.

Greensburg Girl Marries Pittsburgher

Monday evening at 7 o'clock Rachel Kathryn Marker, daughter of Henry Eugene Marker, of Maple avenue, Greensburg, became the bride of Maitland Alexander Wilson, son of the Joseph Charles Wilsons, of Neville street, in the Marker home. Officiating was the Rev. Dr. Daniel Russell, of the Rutgers Presbyterian Church of New York, assisted by the Rev. Henry B. Strock, of the First Presbyterian Church of Greensburg.

The bride, given in marriage by her father, wore a sleeveless gown of white satin with a veil of eggshell tulle finished with a cap of old rose point lace. Her boquet was of gardenias and lilies of the valley.

Mary Carolyn Copeland, the maid of honor, wore turquoise blue satin, and carried Talisman roses and bronze snapdragons. The two small cousins of the bride, Harriet Mullane and Mary Louise Bartholomew, were the flower girls, wearing frocks of peach colored taffeta, and carrying colonial bouquets. Walter L. Shanahan was the best man.

Announcement has been made of the marriage of Miss Vera Vinogradoff, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. D. I. Vinogradoff, of Regent Square, to Victor Vacquier, Jr., of Madison, Wis., which took place on January 10. The bride is a graduate of Carnegie Tech and the bridegroom of the University of Wisconsin.

Jewish Group To Hear Talk On Theater

At the January meeting of the Pittsburgh Section, National Council Jewish Women, to be held Tuesday at the Y. M. & W. H. A., Miss Anita Block, foreign play reader for the Theater Guild, will answer the query, "What do we want in the theater?"

Miss Block was born and educated in New York City and is a graduate of Barnard College. She devoted a number of years to editorial work on a newspaper, and later spent several years as a dramatic critic. For the last three years she has been reading for the Guild, at the same time lecturing on the drama and the theater of Europe and America.

Mrs. Louis Reizenstein has arranged the program and Mrs. S. I. Lebeau is in charge of the social hour and tea that will close the afternoon. Hostesses for the occasion will include Miss Miriam Schonfield, Mrs. Joseph DeRoy, Mrs. Morris Balter and Mrs. Charles Cuden.

Miss Coleman Sets Wedding For Saturday

Miss Marcelee Tune Coleman, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. Lafayette Coleman, of Jackson street, has named Saturday as her wedding day. She will become the bride of Harold Raymond Olson, son of Elof Olson, of Tiffinsville, in the Highland Presbyterian Church at 7:30 o'clock in the evening. There will be a small reception later in the Coleman home for the immediate families.

Miss Helena Marie Coster will be the maid of honor, and the bridesmaids will include Miss Helen Domhoff, Miss Willa Smith, Miss Emma Stevenson and Miss Sara Jane Hutchison. Dorothy Johnson and Marjorie Weise will be the flower girls, and Edwin Le Verne Mitchell will be the ring bearer.

Serving as best man will be Donald S. Gwinn, of Akron, O., and the ushers will include William Edward Coleman, brother of the bride-elect, John Morton Tune, John Bash and Lowrie Billstone, of Warren, Pa.

TRAVEL AND RESORT INFORMATION

Portland St. Girl Weds in P.A.A. Annex

W[illegible] Hampton of Portland street announces the marriage of his daughter, Miss Mary Louise [illegible], to John C. Peterson, son of Mr. and Mrs. John E. Peterson of Wilkinsburg, which took place in the annex of the Pittsburgh Athletic Association on [illegible] evening, January 17, at 8:30 o'clock. Officiating was the Rev. Dr. S. N. [illegible]. The ceremony took place before an altar of ciborium ferns and bamboo, on either side of which were placed tall candelabra holding cathedral tapers.

The bride, who was given in marriage by her father, wore a gown of eggshell satin with a motif of seed pearls at the neckline and embroidered with pearls at the hemline. Her veil of tulle cascaded from a cap of tulle and pearls to the full court length of her gown, which fell in soft folds from the waistline. She carried white orchids and lilies of the valley.

Mrs. [illegible] Brett Cramp, the matron of honor, wore a gown of turquoise blue satin with a [illegible] train and a cape collar forming short sleeves. Miss Helen Wilson, who was the maid of honor, wore a similar gown of peach-colored satin, and the bridesmaids chose yellow satin gowns. All of them carried spring flowers. The bridesmaids included Miss Elizabeth Williams, Mrs. John Gray Miller, Miss Katherine Ness of Buffalo, N. Y., and Mrs. Charles Q. Lesher of Germantown, Pa.

Serving as his brother's best man was Dr. William D. Peterson, and two other brothers, Herbert H. Peterson and Charles C. Peterson of New Brighton, were among the ushers, who included [illegible] Brett Cramp, John Gray Miller and Harold MacCartney of New York.

After the wedding there was a dinner-dance for 120 guests. The bridal table was centered with jonquils and yellow snapdragons on a yellow cloth and yellow tapers in silver holders. Mr. and Mrs. Peterson left for a wedding trip and will make their home in Portland street when they return.

Miss McClay Married to Windber Man

Mr. and Mrs. C. W. McClay of Second street, Aspinwall, announce the marriage of their daughter, Miss Emma McClay, to Victor Raymond Vack of Windber, Pa., which took place at 5:30 o'clock Wednesday afternoon in the First Presbyterian Church, Aspinwall. Officiating was the Rev. George Roland. The church was decorated with palms and ferns and tall candelabra holding white cathedral tapers.

The bride's gown was of white velvet embroidered with pearls, and she carried orchids and lilies of the valley. The maid of honor was her sister, Miss Gertrude McClay, who wore a gown of dahlia velvet and carried calla lilies. The bridesmaids were her cousins, Miss Margaret McKay in blue satin and Miss Thelma McKay in green satin. They carried lavender and white bouquets of heather, snapdragons and roses. James Vack served as his brother's best man, and the ushers were Raymond Faucet and Charles W. Hastings of Pittsburgh.

After the wedding there was a supper, with the bridal table decked with heather and white roses and white tapers in brass holders. Mr. and Mrs. Vack left for a southern trip and upon their return will reside in Windber, Pa.

Claysville Man Weds In Boston

Mr. and Mrs. John F. Barry of Beacon street, Waban, Mass., announce the marriage of their daughter, Miss Ruth Barry, to George Lysle III, son of Mr. and Mrs. George Lysle, Jr., of Claysville, Pa., which took place on Friday, January 16, in the Church of the Good Shepherd, Boston, Mass. Officiating was the Rev. Richard T. Loring, Jr.

Miss Margaret Barry was her sister's maid of honor, wearing turquoise blue satin, and the bridesmaids, Miss Jean Lysle, sister of the bridegroom, and Miss Alice Furbish, wore rose satin, and they all carried Talisman roses.

The bride was gowned in white satin with a veil of old rose point lace. Her bouquet was of gardenias, sweetheart roses and lilies of the valley.

The bride is a graduate of Mount Holyoke College, class of 1928, and of the Harvard Business School, class of 1930. After a honeymoon in Bermuda, Mr. and Mrs. Lysle III will make their home in Pelham, N. Y.

WORK ON NEW FRENCH SUPER LINER STARTS

Electric Drive Planned For New Ship; Speed of 30 Knots Expected

The French Line has announced its intention to construct what it calls the fastest and largest electrically propelled passenger ship in the world. The length of the ship is to be more than 1,000 feet and its speed more than 30 knots.

Construction has already been started at St. Nazaire, the announcement stated, and it is expected that the liner will enter the Havre-New York service in the spring of 1934.

She will have four propellers driven by turbo-electric motors, which will draw their current from four generators driven by turbines operated by high pressure superheated steam. The evaporating plant will consist of 30 water tube boilers under 450 pounds pressure. The machinery is to be built at Belfort.

Jean Tillier, resident director of the French Line in the United States and Canada, was advised by cable that construction has begun on the new super-liner with which the company hopes to win the Atlantic blue ribbon, now held by the German liners Bremen and Europa. He estimated that the cost of the new ship will range from $27,500,000 to $30,000,000.

It is believed that the new liner will be capable of developing about 150,000 horsepower in order to maintain a speed in excess of 30 knots, which will enable her to make the run between New York and Havre in less than four and one-half days.

Tillier said that at present it is impossible to state the exact tonnage of the new liner, as any figures now set would be subject to change while the ship is in the early stages of construction. The liner will accommodate 3,000 passengers and crew.

Pittsburgh Party Will Leave Tuesday

One of the largest parties to sail for the West Indies this winter will leave Pittsburgh Tuesday afternoon in special parlor cars for Philadelphia, where they will board the Republic, of the United States Lines. The party will sail Wednesday, under the leadership of J. M. Stokely, who has conducted former trips, and this is expected to be one of the most extensive conducted so far.

The Republic will sail from Philadelphia and will call at Nassau, Kingston, Cristobal and Havana, and at each of these ports special sightseeing trips to the various points of interest will be available for the traveler.

Havre Port of Call For Cunard Liners

The Cunard Line has announced that hereafter the cabin steamers operating during the winter in its English Channel service will call at Havre instead of Cherbourg on westbound voyages.

The Caronia, sailing from London, is the first Cunard liner to stop at the new westbound port, making the call after leaving Southampton. At Havre the passenger trains run practically all the way down to the steamers. Havre has long been the port of call for eastbound Cunard Line cabin steamers.

Coast Station Has New Radiophone

The German Radio Corporation has equipped the coast station Maiquetia, near La Guayra, in Venezuela, with a new radiophone of a wide radius which is expected to prove of importance for ocean traffic to the West Indies. On her latest voyage the twin-screw motorship Magdalena of the Hamburg-American Line was in communication with Maiquetia at a distance of 1,500 nautical miles. On board of the Magdalena, as well as on shore, the reception was excellent.

Western Railroad Assigns New Cars

The Chicago, Milwaukee, St. Paul and Pacific Railroad has announced the assignment of several cars of new type on their lines. A sleeping car of improved type has been assigned to the regular line on 11 and 22 between Chicago and Sioux Falls. A lounge car of the Milwaukee Olympian type is now in service on No. 3, Manilla to Sioux City. Trains 125 and 126 between Cedar Rapids and Ottumwa were operated by one of the new Ryan steam motors.

TOURING CLUB OFFERS HELP

The Touring Club of France has invited Americans traveling in France to join the club, which is housed in its new building on the Champs Elysees. There kindly hosts welcome strangers, smooth out their troubles without charge, and give every kind of information and assistance.

The club has advised those who arrive by land or sea not to high-hat the customs officer nor to quail before him. The club suggests that to the usual question, "Have you something to declare?" the traveler say, "I don't know. Do you care to look?" The responsibility is then his, and the Touring Club assures that "generally, with a benevolent glance, he will let you by."

I. M. M. HAS NEW RECORD

More than 60,500 tourist third cabin passengers were carried across the Atlantic last year by the International Mercantile Marine Company, according to officials of the company.

Figures made public by J. S. Mahool, passenger traffic manager, show that 60,522 passengers traveled in this class on ships of the White Star, Red Star and Atlantic Transport Lines.

NEW SERVICE TO BERMUDA

The Canadian Pacific liner Duchess of York is en route from Liverpool to New York, where she will inaugurate a new departure in Canadian Pacific policy by maintaining a weekly service between the American metropolis and Hamilton, Bermuda. This new service, which will commence on January 31 and end April 12, will thus make available additional accommodations during the New York-Burmuda rush season. The liner is under the command of Capt. R. N. Stuart.

The Duchess of York was the last of the quartet of duchess boats to be completed, and has a gross registered tonnage of 20,000, a speed of better than 18 knots and a length of 602 feet. The ship is equipped throughout with the Ball-Louvre ventilation system, which has proved ideal for tropical climates. The Duchess of York has already established a new record between Great Britain and Quebec, Montreal and St. John.

Adherence to Adverse Trump Rule Loses Grand Slam for Bridge Player

By ERNEST H. HEINRICHS,
Sun-Telegraph Bridge Expert.

Walking into a neighbor's home the other evening the writer arrived just at a time when the family, consisting of father, mother, a son and daughter—the latter both high school students—were engaged in a quite animated discussion over a bridge hand.

The visitor asked:

"What is the trouble here?"

The father in a tone of triumph replied:

"Ha, you are just in time to come to my support."

"And what's it all about?"

"It's like this. Daughter and I are partners, and I was declarer playing a contract at four clubs, which I made all right, but that wise young daughter of mine insists that I should have made game, which I say is impossible."

"Do you remember the hand you held?"

"Sure, here it is: Spades—ace; Hearts—ace, 6, 5, 4; Clubs—K, J, 10, 9, 8, 7; Diamonds—ace, king."

Strong Hand

"A pretty strong hand; and what did your partner hold?"

"Here is her hand: Spades—J, 9, 7, 5; Hearts—7; Clubs—A, Q, 3; Diamonds—J, 10, 9, 5, 4."

"Well, that isn't much of a hand, but it fits so well with yours that your daughter is quite right; in fact, with the adverse cards being normally distributed, you should not only have made game, but a grand slam!"

"Why, you are— Excuse me, I didn't mean to say that. How do you do it?"

"What was the opening lead?"

"The jack of hearts, led by mother on my left."

"Well, then I would play the hand in this way: After you take the first trick with your ace of hearts, you lead a small heart from your own hand and trump it in dummy for the second trick. Then you lead a diamond from dummy, take it in your own hand and lead another heart, which you ruff again in dummy. Now you lead a spade from dummy, which you take in your own hand with the ace. Then you lead your last heart and ruff it in dummy with the last trump held in the open hand. You now have the choice of leading from dummy either a diamond or a spade, but I would prefer the spade, which you trump in your own hand. After that, all your cards led from the king of clubs down are good and you take every trick."

"There, daddy, I was right, wasn't I?"

Observed Rule

"Yes, but what about the rule that declarer should always exhaust the adverse trumps as soon as the opportunity occurs?"

"Oh, that rule is all right, but you don't 'always' apply it. You know there is no such word as 'always' in the auction bridge dictionary."

The deal consisted of the following four hands, which, as you will notice, is a set-up for a grand slam, if played correctly:

NORTH.
Spades—J-9-7-5.
Hearts—7.
Clubs—A-Q-3.
Diamonds—J-10-9-5-4.

WEST.
Spades—8-6-4-3.
Hearts—K-J-10-9.
Clubs—6-4.
Diamonds—6-3-2.

EAST.
Spades—K-Q-10-2.
Hearts—Q-8-3-2.
Clubs—5-2.
Diamonds—Q-8-7.

SOUTH.
Spades—A-6-5-4.
Hearts—A-6-5-4.
Clubs—K-J-10-9-8-7.
Diamonds—A-K.

The Original Bid

J. B. T., Charleroi, Pa., signing himself "a regular reader of your column," asks: "Is the original no-trump bid an informatory bid?"

Every bid is an informatory bid, per se, because no matter what may be its character it conveys to the partner certain information. However, there are some bridge circles in this country where the practice prevails that, when a player does not hold a hand containing a legitimate suit bid, he opens the auction by bidding one no trump with the expectation that his partner will supply the deficiencies of his own hand. There is another practice, found in some of the "back states," where an original bid of one club is a demand bid for partner to bid no trump. Obviously such methods cannot be recommended. An original bid, whether a suit bid or a no trump, must have certain requirements to be sound. If it lacks them, the hand should not be bid under any circumstances because it conveys to the partner inaccurate information which is the greatest mistake any player can make in the game of bridge.

This rule is inflexible in auction as well as in contract or in American bridge.

The following deal has been sent to us by a young lady from Gerritt street, Pittsburgh:

NORTH.
Spades—K.
Hearts—A-K-Q.
Diamonds—A-Q-J.
Clubs—K-10-9-8-7-6.

WEST.
Spades—9-8-6-5-3.
Hearts—5-2.
Diamonds—10-7-3.
Clubs—Q-5.

EAST.
Spades—7-2.
Hearts—8-4.
Diamonds—9-8-6-5-4-2.
Clubs—A-4-3.

SOUTH.
Spades—A-Q-J-10.
Hearts—J-10-9-8-7-6.
Diamonds—K.
Clubs—J-2.

South, as declarer, can make a grand slam either at hearts or no trump. In each instance, West opens the lead with a spade. How would you play it?

W. M. C. H., Aurelia street, East End: In auction bridge the requirements for an original suit bid are two sure tricks—ace or king—queen—one of which should be in the suit you declare. The suit you bid should consist of five cards, such as ace, 10, 9, 7, 6, or if it is a four-card suit, A, Q, J, 9.

For an original bid at no trump, the hand requires also two sure tricks, distributed among the four suits. In estimating the strength of your hand for an original no trump declaration, the point system for counting card values is generally recommended. According to this system the ace counts four, the king three, the queen two, and the jack one. A hand with a count of 13 points, with high-card strength in at least three suits, constitutes the requirements for a no-trump bid. For example:

Spades, 9, 8, 7; hearts, 10, 9; clubs, 9, 8, 6; diamonds, A, K, 10, 7, 5; bid one diamond.

Spades, A, 9, 8; hearts, K, Q, 9; clubs, K, J, 7, 6; diamonds, 9, 7, 6; bid one no trump.

The Tristate Duplicate Bridge League held its midwinter tournament last week at Uniontown, Pa., and, as usual, the event proved a great success. Some of the best known players from New York City, Philadelphia, Greenville, Pittsburgh, Wheeling and other cities from this part of Pennsylvania, Ohio and West Virginia, took part in the contests. Among the winners were Mrs. H. D. Stahl, of Carrick, and Capt. F. G. French, of the Pittsburgh Bridge Club.

A school of instruction will be conducted by Mrs. O. B. Hughes, former president of the Allegheny County Association, at the first regular meeting of the City Council of Parent-Teacher Associations in the Board of Education tomorrow afternoon. R. O. Hughes will speak.

Bradford Woods Juniors to Meet

As the first step in their selection of a play for spring presentation, reviews of several plays will be heard this afternoon at the meeting of the Bradford Woods Juniors, for which Miss Katheryn Golden is hostess.

MADISON MIRROR OF FEMININE FANCY

WE'VE thought up a swell plan for you and Beckert's. Now, we know that you want a garden this spring (everybody who has any ground at all wants a garden), but we think maybe you're in the same position we are . . . don't know what to plant with what, nor how to plant it, nor when. So, our scheme for you and Beckert's is to make Beckert's plan gardens for you to plant—simple gardens that you can't go wrong on . . . flowers and vegetables that are easy to raise. Beckert's will tell us, and we'll tell you, how to group them, what to use as border, which ones to put in first, and all those necessary details. But the first thing for you to do to help along on this plan is to send to Beckert's (101 Federal Street, just over the Sixth St. bridge) for their 54th Seed Annual, so that you'll know what it's all about. Will you? (More about this later.)

. . . Whole Wheat Bread

THANK heaven, we've at last found a loaf of bread that comes up to the doctors specifications, and doesn't taste like something you'd expect to come up to a doctor's specifications. It's this Whole Wheat Bread down at Rice's Bakery, and the trick of its flavor is that they grind the flour fresh every day on their own little stone mill, and then make it into bread less than 12 hours after it's ground. Furthermore, it doesn't pile up calories, for it's sweetened with California Orange Blossom Honey instead of sugar or molasses. (Diabetics, harken!) Buy it downtown at 441 Market Street; East Liberty at 6007 Penn Avenue; Squirrel Hill at 1725 Murray Avenue and at Beaver Falls.

. . . Hair Pencil

IT'S a pretty nice world, after all. Here we go wandering into Maison Frederic's never suspecting that we're about to make a momentous discovery. Not to keep you in suspense . . . we've found a way to postpone the evil day of "those first gray hairs." Yes, sir. A magic hair pencil in shades to match all varieties of heads, and destined to cover up those horrid gray hairs just as if they never were. It's not a dye, nor does it smear and soil. One application lasts several days, and then comes off with the shampoo. Let Maison Frederic's show you how to use it, and later on you can buy one of those pencils and be your own artist. Call Atlantic 0884, or stop in at 207 Fifth Avenue.

. . . Two Specials

TWO dandy specials at Dimling's this week! Assorted Spiced Jelly Drops, those nice, gummy little fellows that decorate the bridge table so nicely and come in mint, clove, wintergreen, anise, sassafras and cinnamon are priced at 25 cents a pound instead of 40. Lay in a supply at this price. These keep fresh for weeks. And, here's a thriller, Cream Chocolate-covered Brazil Nuts—whole Brazil nuts, dipped in creamy fondant and then in chocolate have taken a sizable drop from 80 cents a pound to 60. (Just for this week.) Buy these specials at any of the seven Dimling stores, or direct from the factory, 801 Liberty Avenue. From now on a flat rate of 15 cents on any size box shipped to any point in the U. S.

. . . Python Pump

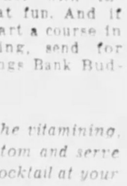
PARISIAN BOOTERY swept us right off our feet this week by announcing that this marvelous genuine python pump, made to order for their shop, was going to sell at $8.95. After noting in our trips around the city that python was hard to find as a needle in a hay stack, and snatched up as quickly as it did come in, we rather expected to find these pumps selling at at least $12.50. It's a simple python pump, with all the good fitting qualities of Parisian pumps in general, and all the smartness that goes with python. You can also have it in a 3-eyelet tie, Sizes 2½ to 8, AAA to C. And the Parisian Bootery is in the Roosevelt Hotel, corner of Penn Avenue and Sixth Street.

. . . Dogwood!

"I'M sick looking at those flowers," sighs you, as your bored eye rests on a bowl of bitter sweet or some other winter decoration. Just the moment to saunter into McClements, at 535 Wood Street, and inspect their just-fresh-in Dogwood. This Dogwood is unique in that it has real stems, and artificial flowers. But, my dears, there are real buds on these real stems, and as the season progresses these burst into bloom, and then you have twice as many flowers. $1.50, $2.00 and $2.50 a spray. Remember, also, that McClements are in the midst of a one-third off sale on fine domestic and imported Pottery. And that they have all sorts of quaint little vases for holding your honey's Valentine.

. . . February Event at Hand

YOU see illustrated, ladies and gentlemen, one of the finest chairs you've ever laid eyes on, and, whether you're in the market for an occasional chair or not, stop in at Gilbert's Fine Furniture (632 Smithfield st.) and see this grand forerunner of their February Event. The frame is of solid mahogany, handcarved, beautifully shaped, and you can have it upholstered in your choice of their newest and most exquisite materials. Full-webbed construction. Hardwood inner frames. Hair-filled cushions. Beautifully finished in every detail. 37½ inches high; 25 inches wide, which is an exceptionally roomy chair. $47.50 is the price, and you can buy it now and have it held for future delivery. Don't miss it.



. . . Start Now

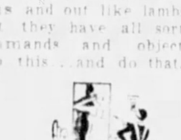
THE "Extra Money for Christmas" people are getting along fine, we hear. Each Saturday they take over their little deposit, and each Saturday they come away with growing enthusiasm for this habit of saving. Why don't you join before January comes to a close and the payments pile up too forbiddingly? The Union Savings Bank (Frick Building) has twelve convenient classes to their Christmas Club, with from twenty-five cents a week up to twenty dollars a week as a payment. Pay for fifty weeks, and then early next December receive a check for all you've paid in, together with interest. It's great fun. And if you'd like to start a course in systematic saving, send for the Union Savings Bank Budget Book.

Fall in with the vitamining, slenderizing custom and serve a tomato juice cocktail at your next luncheon.

. . . Like Lambs

A GREAT many of the people who come into the Lasner Studio remind us of the March winds—in like lions and out like lambs. At first they have all sorts of commands and objections. "Do this . . and do that." "I can't wear thus-and-so," and "You'll have to make it this way . . . ." But gradually comes a change of attitude . . . they begin to see the light . . . begin to see that here is a skillful hand at the work of molding their figures, a brain that comprehends the irregularities of the human figure as few people do. And by the time they go out with that erstwhile protruding abdomen held gently but firmly in place, those too-wide hips drawn in, that excess flesh evenly distributed, their comment has changed to, "You're a marvel, Mrs. Lasner." (604 Clark Building).

. . . To Babies



OH, DEAR! All the nicest things happen when you're too young to appreciate them. Here you come into this world, and instead of having to scurry around for something to wear, find that mother has taken care of all that in one visit to the Jay Kiddie Shop, 3007 Jenkins Arcade. You've nothing to do but hold still while nurse puts them on—soft little shirts, warm nighties, dainty slips and dresses, beribboned bonnets. You see, Mother knows that this is the town's leading shop for layettes, from the simplest to the most elaborate, and that she can shop here quietly and privately. We wonder if she knows about the informative booklet, "Baby's Outfit," which she may have upon request, and about the handiness of this wicker basket illustrated for taking you and your belongings on your first machine ride to Grandmother's. Tell her to call Atlantic 5787.

We read of navy blue, black, beige, green and grey in reports of the first spring suits.

. . . Spring Slippers

WELL, girls, we've picked out your spring business shoe for you. You can see a picture of it right up there, and then you can go down and see the original at Petty's Bootery, main floor of the Jenkins Arcade—a whiz of a black mat kid trimmed jauntily in snakeskin and patent leather. You can step right into this shoe without the usual "breaking in," because the leather in Petty's shoes is stretched before they are made, which makes them comfortable from the first wearing, and enables them to keep their shape forever. You'll find the prices exceptionally pleasant—you see, Petty's have a large share in the factory which manufactures their shoes, and you share in their savings on overhead, advertising, etc. $8.50 and $10 are their two prices.

. . . Hudson Seal

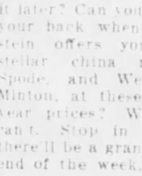
THERE'S a Hudson Seal Coat with shawl collar and large cuffs down at the Connolly Fur Shop that certainly has the ladies in a fever. They can't keep it in stock . . . Mr. Connolly tells me he's taken more orders from that coat than almost any coat he's ever had. The thing is that it's made of the best grade of Hudson Seal you can buy, and it's a model that looks well on almost anyone with its graceful, slenderizing lines. Then the price is a drawing card—$225 is probably lower than a coat of this type ever sold for before. Mr. Connolly doesn't want to stock up now, but if you want one he can have it made for you in three days. The Connolly Shop is at 207 Fifth Avenue, third floor.

. . . Last Week

MY DEAR LADIES, do you realize that we're about to embark upon the last week in January, whence will come to an end this marvelous China Sale down at Reizenstein's, 625 Liberty Avenue? Can you see yourself paying $60 for a dozen plates in June that you can get now for $40? Can you see yourself passing up rare 20%-to-50%-off bargains, and then crying about it later? Can you bear to turn your back when Mr. Reizenstein offers you works of stellar china makers like Spode, and Wedgwood, and Minton, at these low once-a-year prices? We know you can't. Stop in Monday . . . there'll be a grand rush at the end of the week.

. . . Southern Sport Shoe

THESE Southlanders certainly do get the breaks. Besides getting a trip to the most heavenly spots on earth, they have a selection from much more fetching summer clothes than you or I can buy next June. For instance, the brown and white sport shoe sketched, from Ritter & Morrison's, is much trickier than anything we saw last summer, or expect to see this summer. Maybe we're pessimistic, but, anyway, we're on the verge of buying a pair and putting them away. Of course, they have those restful Menihan Arch Aid features—rigid yet comfortable arch, well fitting heel, roomy toe. Drop in and see them at 501 Liberty Avenue. (Listen in on Ritter & Morrison's program on Friday morning—WCAE, 9:15.)

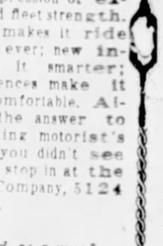


. . . Be Accomplished

LAST summer as you ruefully sat on the beach while the rest of the crowd went gleefully into the deep water, you promised yourself faithfully that this winter you were going to learn to swim. Are you doing it? Well, remember next summer's coming, and with it the same old heartache when you see the fun you're missing. Don't put it off any longer. Stop in the Natatorium (510 Duquesne Way). Tuesday and arrange for a course of lessons. The prices are surprisingly low; the teachers are excellent; the water is delightful—tested each week and kept at summer temperature. And after the swim, a Sun Bath. Tuesdays, Thursdays and Friday mornings are Ladies' Days. (The pool may be chartered for private parties.)

. . . Fancy Iced Cakes

ONE DAY we were lucky enough to step in Utility Hall just after the ran had a session in decorating small cakes, and for once in our life a fancy cake tasted better than it looked. If you would like to know the secrets go down to Utility Hall on Tuesday at 2 and see the demonstration on Decorative Cakes. On Monday night at 7:30, you'll find the many different ways in which "A Mere Potato" may be served, and on Friday at 2, "How Eggs or None" is a demonstration on conserving eggs without having eggs suspect it. A... hasn't looked in on the Lamp Shade Classes lately, you're going to be surprised at the artistic talent these lampshading ladies are developing. Drop in.



Utility Hall is the permanent home service department of the Duquesne Light and Equitable Gas Companies in the Philharmonic Building, 435 Sixth Avenue, open to all, without charge.

. . . Fleet and Strong

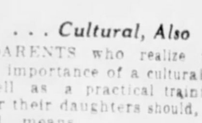
DISCRIMINATING motorists who visited the Automobile Show found in the new Lincoln the fulfillment of all their ambitions—a newly designed car throughout motor, chassis and body, and more powerful and silent than any Lincoln has ever been before. The chassis is longer (even the radiator-cap greyhound is longer), the wheels are smaller, the center of gravity has been lowered...and the result is an expression of extreme grace and fleet strength. Free-wheeling makes it ride smoother than ever; new interiors make it smarter; added conveniences make it more ideally comfortable. Altogether, it's the answer to the discriminating motorist's prayer, and if you didn't see it at the Show, stop in at the Linford Motor Company, 5124 Liberty Avenue.

Added to plaid as a much-mentioned design for spring silks are checks and stripes.

. . . Cultural, Also

PARENTS who realize the importance of a cultural as well as a practical training for their daughters should, by all means, visit the Grace Martin Secretarial School. Here one learns to carry off the business of an office successfully without losing feminine zest and charm. Both young women and mature women are invited to join the mid-winter classes, beginning February 2. A regular 10-months Day Course, including a thorough training in shorthand, typewriting and business subjects. Night Classes from 5:30 to 7:30, or 7:30 to 9:30 on Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays; and a special course in typing each morning. Let Mrs. Cornelius, principal, help your daughter plan her course. 18th floor, Keenan Building.

. . . Seed Annual



HOT off the press comes Beckert's 54th Seed Annual, a stupendous treatise on everything for your garden from cabbages to columbine, with pictures and such practical information on planting that even the most amateur farmer may hope for results. Sections on Lawns, Fertilizers, Insecticides, Garden Tools are included, as well as a convenient blank for sending in your order. It's not a bit too early to start thinking about your garden, and whether the allotted space is 100 acres or a 10-foot square, you'll find this catalogue immensely helpful. And you can be sure that people who have been getting out a seed catalogue for 54 years must know something about it. Write or call into Beckert's Seed Store, 101 Federal Street (just over the Sixth Street bridge).

With somber-hued woolen garments one of the smartest late additions is the bright-colored hat.

Vile Notes

BASS VIOLS have long been variously known as "bull fiddles" and "dog houses" in current slang at studios. But a little girl, witnessing a broadcast with her mother recently, gave them a new name.

"Oh, lookie, Mamma," she piped, "She the man playing the big ukelele."

Maurice a Plumber?

E. O. J., WHOM we recognize as a prominent notary public downtown, writes:

"I suffered intense agony listening to Maurice Chevalier's attempt to entertain the American public with his unwitty jokes and songs. It is appalling to think that Maurice should have drawn such an enormous stipend for 15 minutes when so many of America's honest citizens are selling apples on the streets. When it comes to entertaining over the "mike" I think that Maurice would make a good plumber."

Half Million for Numerology Series

A large cigaret company has signed a new contract with the Columbia Broadcasting System entailing an expenditure for time alone of $561,704 during 1931. Starting January 27, it will use a network of 66 stations for two 15-minute broadcasts a week devoted to "numerology." This period is to be conducted by Lorna Fantin.

Gross Revenue Of Two Chains Sets New High

Close to 27 Million Dollars Poured Into Network Coffers Last Year

WASHINGTON, Jan. 24.—Chain broadcasting in America has [illegible] weathered the stormy financial seas of 1930 but came through the year with flying colors flying.

Increasing their revenues from the sale of time on the air by 43 per cent over 1929, the National Broadcasting Company and the Columbia Broadcasting System together show a gross income from that source alone of $26,[illegible] in 1930. This is exclusive of revenues from other sources such as program talent, for [illegible] the networks are among the largest booking agencies in the show business.

Gross income to the NBC from time sold to advertisers during 1930 was $20,062,771, an average of about $1,671,148 per month. Columbia's gross income from time sold was $6,704,620, an average of about $558,718 per month. Though their choice broadcasting hours are now largely occupied by commercial sponsors, neither has sold all its available time and both continue to furnish far more sustaining or non-commercial programs than sponsored programs.

In 1929 the two chains sold time to the value of $18,729,871, forging 83 per cent ahead of 1928 when their combined income from time sold was $10,252,497. In 1927, when the N. B. C. was alone in the field, network time brought in $3,760,010.

While the figures represent network income alone, the proportion of increases by individual broadcasting stations, and most stations devote far more time to programs of their own staging than to chain programs, is believed to be about the same. The broadcasters everywhere, including the little fellows who have no chain affiliation, have enjoyed an unprecedented year of prosperity in 1930.

Radio Sets Sell At Price of Steak

Figured on a poundage basis, says Former Radio Commissioner O. H. Caldwell, radio receiving sets sell over the counter at somewhat near the price of beefsteaks in the butcher shops—from 45 to 50 cents per pound.

Canadian Stations On N. B. C. Network

Four leading Canadian broadcasting stations are now members of American networks. The NBC this week added CFCF, Montreal, making its second Canadian unit, CKGW, Toronto, having been linked for the last year.

WEBER AND FIELDS bring their Dutch sketches to WCAE fans next Saturday night at 8 o'clock, NBC series.

Tax on Sets Held Illegal

South Carolina's proposed state tax on radio receiving sets has been declared unconstitutional by the state's own Supreme Court, thus ending the first effort in the short history of American broadcasting to levy fees on the listening public for the reception of radio programs. Station WBT, Charlotte, N. C., fought the case through the courts, backed by other broadcasters and the radio manufacturers.

As passed by the South Carolina Legislature, the law placed a graduated tax of 50 cents to $2 on the use of all radio receivers costing $50 to $500, the proceeds to go to the state tuberculosis hospital. The tax was fought largely on the grounds that radio waves are interstate in character and that the proposed state tax would have been an interference with the federal government's exclusive authority over interstate commerce.

Foreigners Equip Buses With Radio

As in the case of radio aboard trains, foreign countries are showing the way to the United States in adopting radios for the entertainment of omnibus passengers. A Czechoslovakian concern is equipping all of its buses with radios. Only a handful of the more enterprising bus lines in this country have equipped their coaches with radio to relieve the monotony of long journeys.

WNBO Asks Higher Power

WASHINGTON, D. C., Jan. 24.—Station WNBO, operated by John Brownlee Spriggs at Silver Haven, Pa., applied to the Federal Radio Commission for authority to increase its power from 100 watts to 100 watts night and 250 watts day on 1200 kilocycles.

The commission received an application from Aeronautical Radio, Inc., for authority to change its location from near Sunbury, Pa., to three miles south of Lewisburg, Pa.

The commission granted KDKA authority to add two more tubes to its last radio stage so that the full output of 50 kilowatts may be procured from the station.

Station Manager Purchases WLAP

Ralph Atlass, manager of WBBM, Chicago, two-thirds owned by the Columbia Broadcasting system, has purchased WLAP, Louisville, which is now being served with Columbia programs.

Large Increase in N. B. C. Fan Mail

American radio listeners continue to write an increasing abundance of fan mail each year. Miss Adelaide Piana, in charge of audience mail for the N. B. C., reports that 1930 brought in nearly 2,200,000 letters, compared with 1,300,000 in 1929.

Little Need of Police on Ether Traffic Lanes

Batcheller Says Stations Doing Their Best to Improve Reception

WASHINGTON, D. C., Jan. 24.—America's radio ambassador-at-large is back from a 9,000-mile inspection tour of the country's radio centers with a message of high praise for the broadcasters for their sincere efforts to adhere to federal regulations, at least insofar as the technical operation of their stations is concerned.

Arthur Batcheller, ace of the Department of Commerce radio supervisory corps, reports that conditions prevailing on the broadcasting lanes are about as good as can be expected considering the congestion that necessarily exists with 615 stations of all sizes and types on the air.

Those peanut whistles, known in radio parlance as beat notes or heterodynes, continue to mar reception on most of the wave lengths, including even some of the so-called clear channels, according to Mr. Batcheller. But this problem is inherent in the overcrowding of the wave lengths, and, as far as the broadcasters are concerned, they are making every effort to minimize it, he says.

They are maintaining the stability of their carrier waves, adhering to their assigned frequencies and otherwise conducting their technical operations with a high degree of efficiency, Mr. Batcheller reports. They know, for one thing, that they are being vigilantly policed by the radio supervisors whose staffs, although greatly undermanned, are working overtime at the district offices and sub-offices of the Department of Commerce to maintain order in the ether traffic.

For another thing, the broadcasters realize that technical imperfections will only redound to their own disadvantage. Though nearly every broadcaster he interviewed is ambitious to obtain higher power for his station, there was a decided appreciation of the fact that "wave wobbling" on a widespread scale would bring bedlam to American radio. Of 53,000 measurements on stations taken during 1930, only a small percentage showed consistent off-frequency operation—a vast improvement over previous years.

"MERTON"

GLENN HUNTER, who won fame in "Merton of the Movies," appears in the George Ade comedy, "Speaking to Father," over WCAE at 7:30 o'clock tonight.

Papal Station To Experiment

ROME, Italy, Jan. 24.—The pope's short-wave radio station, which will broadcast from Vatican City on 19.84 and 50.26 meters, is not going to be devoted to religious uses exclusively. Father Gianfranceschi, station director, is collaborating with the Pontifical Academy of Science in plans to investigate scientific phases of radio, including echoes, fading, atmospherics and the influence of the sun on electromagnetic waves.

GRAHAM McNAMEE SPEAKING:

The Ponce Sisters

TWO OF THE best-looking girls around the studios are the Ponce Sisters, who sing together on the air pretty frequently. One is Ethel and the other is Dorothea, but nobody knows which is which except their father, a former music publisher and now a concert manager who patiently points them out to people month after month. And even he, at the end of his patience, sometimes gets them twisted.

Mr. McNamee

They aren't twins—there's two years' difference. And they really do look enough different from each other, you'd think, but people will mix them up. They say that's why they have to keep on with a sister act—if they tried to separate managers would become confused and each would get the other's prospective bookings.

The girls were born in Boston, and grew up in New England. Their mother, a prominent pianist, gave them their first music lessons. They showed talent early, but they planned entirely different careers for themselves. One wanted to be a teacher and the other a domestic science expert—don't ask me which.

But before they got that far they landed in the entertainment world. It's about five years ago since they first went on the air, and in the interim they have had several years of vaudeville experience, even breaking into the Palace in New York.

Their mother made sure they could play musical instruments—they can perform creditably on the violin and the piano—but because of the remarkable natural harmony of their voices they have specialized in singing together, somewhat to the neglect of all their other talents.

The are only out of their teens by a little bit, and for five years they have been before the footlights, microphones and movie cameras, but they are bored stiff with anything that smacks of Broadway in their ordinary lives. When they are in New York they spend most of their time at home keeping house for their father.

The LOUDSPEAKER by LOUIS REID

Thrift Talks Lead

NEW YORK, Jan. 24.—Were a poll taken of the various types of programs heard on the air within the last month, it would show talks on thrift and economy far, far in the lead. Were we asked, with the world tumbling about our neck, to name our favorite business optimist we would unhesitatingly answer, Charles M. Schwab. Charles M. Schwab however, seldom faces the microphones. Conversations between America and Australia still catch the eavesdroppers in the armchairs.

Louis Reid.

Radio is forever doing the unexpected. Who would have thought Cal and Al would ever be heard in the same program?

George Eastman has seven pipe organs in his Rochester home. I doubt if there are seven radio sets in any man's home.

Were all the food recipes which are given to the microphones assembled into a book it would require six men to carry it into the White House kitchen.

I have yet to hear the "Beautiful Blue Danube" as a vocal solo, but I have heard it on every conceivable instrument, including the jewsharp and musical saw.

One of the most expert pianists yet heard on the loudspeakers is Helen Corbin Heinl, of Washington, D. C., who played in the Marine Band concert the other night. She studied with MacDowell.

Wonder when Leopold Godowsky will say "yes" to the broadcasters. We last heard Godowsky at an impromptu entertainment at the Wardman Park Hotel in Washington, D. C. He was reluctant to play, but after much persuasion consented. He sat down at a frightfully out-of-tune upright and let Chopin ripple through the fingers for half an hour.

Progress note: Will Osborne's Orchestra is now indulging in more choral singing and less solo crooning. Also it has happily dispensed with brass.

The loudspeakers have yet to echo with Cole Porter's lampoons on college alma maters and stein songs as current in "The New Yorker."

Enunciation of Stars

Broadcasters are no longer devoting as much attention, thank Allah, to the Toreador Song from "Carmen," the Peer Gynt Suite" and the Barcarolle from "Tales of Hoffman."

John McCormack is the most conspicuous member of that small but able group of male singers—the group includes John Charles Thomas and Reinald Werrenrath—whose every word on the radio is distinguishable to his hearers.

Sports broadcasts are now divided between boxing and hockey, demanding from announcers the quick eye of a sharpshooter and the ready tongue of a street corner medicine man.

The musical microphonic march is richest in masters of the piano-forte than in any other class of artist. Of all the pianists who have taken to the air, Percy Grainger fills the armchairs most easily, chiefly because his music is invariably gay and rollicking.

Some listeners recently squawked to the broadcasters about Jascha Heifetz; said there were too many violinists on the air. Yes, but there are not too many Heifetzes.

Bill Munday, the drawling announcer, was once Georgia's youngest lawyer.

Organ recitals on the air are now ranging from Rachmaninoff's "Prelude" to "Peanut Vendor."

About Eddie Guest

Edgar A. Guest calls himself "just a newspaper guy." He wears the niftiest overcoat we ever saw on a newspaper guy. Otherwise he appears to have the same disregard for sartorial perfection that legend has associated with newspaper men.

Guest, who recites his verse in the Detroit Symphony programs, enjoys radio, though he frankly believes that commercial sponsors defeat their own purposes of good will by overemphasis of ballyhoo.

The Detroit bard has an idea that radio has a long way to travel before poetry will achieve any distinctive popularity on the air. What poetry needs on the radio, in our opinion, is some first-class voices—such a voice as that which Pedro de Cordoba brought to a brief recital last year. The broadcasters seem to be in no haste to retain an excellent reading voice when they occasionally snare one.

Some of the best choral singing yet audible to the armchairs is that voiced by the English Singers. Their secret seems to lie in their informality. They sing while seated around a table.

The presentation of drama continues to be the weakest aspect of the entire broadcasting situation. William A. Brady would be our nomination of a showman who could put vitality and attractiveness into radio drama.

Young Zazzerino is the most rhythmically - infectious name ever to have rolled off sport announcer's tongue. What a ballad "Zazzerino" would make for Balieff and his troupe! It is even superior to "Katerina."

ASPIRIN

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS

UNLESS you see the name Bayer and the word genuine on the package as pictured above you can never be sure that you are taking the genuine Bayer Aspirin tablets that thousands of physicians prescribe in their daily practice.

The name Bayer means genuine Aspirin. It is your guarantee of purity—your protection against imitations. Millions of users have proved that it is safe.

Genuine Bayer Aspirin tablets promptly relieve:

Headaches	Neuritis	Colds	Toothache
Neuralgia	Sore Throat	Lumbago	Rheumatism

No harmful after-effects follow its use. It does not depress the heart.

Aspirin is the trade-mark of Bayer manufacture of monoaceticacidester of salicylicacid.

THE LATE DR. LEWIS BAKER

Health Questions Answered

By the Late Dr. Lewis Baker's Associates

Our Advertisements, Appearing In the Newspapers Throughout the Country During the Past Twenty-One Years, Recommend Trustworthy Products, Everyone of Which is Guaranteed Free From All Narcotic Habit-Forming Drugs; and Beneficial to a High Degree When Used as Directed. The Extracts of Letters Published Herewith Are All Genuine and Unpurchased.

A perfect state of health should be the aim of everybody. The "half-sick" man, woman, boy or girl cannot be efficient in work or play, nor can they be popular and magnetic in their social contacts.

When we are wholly sick, our relatives and friends sympathize with us, but the "half-sick" always ailing person gets no sympathy and is often neglected or shunned.

Anemic, watery blood makes "half-sick" persons. Many are anemic and never suspect the fact. However, they find themselves "always tired," "always worried," nervous, trembling and weak from slight exertion, irritable with nervous indigestion, loss of appetite, cold hands and feet, and often dizzy spells following sleepless nights.

Some are affected one way and some another, but all lead a miserable, half-sick existence.

Immediate and lasting benefits accrue to these anemic persons who recognize their trouble and take Cadomene Tablets regularly each day with meals to enrich the blood and strengthen the nerves.

S. S. N. asks: "What do you recommend for kidney and bladder trouble? Symptoms: backache, between hips, burning pain when voiding, which is more frequent than normal, especially at night. This disturbs my rest."

Answer: A tonic-diuretic medicine with soothing, neutralizing qualities should be taken for relief. I suggest Balmwort Tablets as the most effective for aiding the functions of kidneys and bladder.

E. C. O. asks: "I am 48 years old. Am bothered with constipation and face is covered with pimples. Am little wound I get fails to heal quickly. Is my blood bad?"

Answer: Apparently your blood contains toxins absorbed from slow-acting bowels. I recommend Sulphoid Tablets as a laxative blood-purifying treatment. These tablets contain purified sulphur, cream of tartar, sarsaparilla, calcium and vegetable extracts.

Miss C. P. asks: "I want to put on a few pounds of solid flesh. I am 20 pounds underweight for my height. What causes this and how can I gain?"

Answer: Certain balancing elements are lacking in your system, causing a diminished process of absorption and nutrition. Hypo-Nuclane Tablets are especially designed to aid in correcting nutritive processes, thus causing a gain in weight.

Mrs. T. K. B. asks: "I am hoping to have your advice to overcome a form of indigestion which, after eating any food creates gas, heartburn, belching and a heavy, lumpy feeling in my stomach. Have tried quite a few remedies."

Answer: Possibly the bowel elimination is sluggish. Perhaps your diet is to blame. First relieve the constipation by taking Cascu-Royal Pills. To aid digestion and tone up the stomach use Triopeptine Tablets for several weeks.

C. O. N. asks: "Have used your Mentho-Laxene cough remedy for over ten years, whenever a member of my large family has a cold or cough. At present I am asking for a safe medicine to stop the pain of neuralgia and headache."

Answer: For the past five years I have found that the German-American compound, known to the medical world as Cardiol Tablets, is both the surest and most pain-relieving product to be had. Contains no narcotics and leaves no bad after-effects.

Answer to C. T. C.: The peculiar penetrating, pain-relieving quality of triplestrength Mentho-Laxene Salve, if applied to the chest, back, aching joints, and quickly banish the pain, and often loosen up the stiffened condition.

Mrs. D. D. asks: "Can you suggest a cough medicine free from chloroform and other dope, drugs, something safe and effective for my small children?"

Answer: Purchase a bottle of essence Mentho-Laxene. It is pure and concentrated to make a full pint of pleasant, effective laxative-tonic cough syrup, when mixed with simple syrup or strained honey as per directions with each bottle.

Miss A. P. D. asks: "I am humiliated by an excessive dandruff on my scalp which makes my hair dull and ugly. Can you help this condition?"

Answer: Procure medicated CHIX Soap. Shampoo the hair as per directions on circular with soap in two weeks' time you will be amazed by the splendid appearance of your hair.

M. K. L. asks: "What causes painful rheumatism and what can I do to be free from the distress it causes?"

Answer: The source of rheumatism is generally an infection brought on by a faulty diet creating toxins which poor elimination by the kidneys, bowels and skin, fail to remove. Cardiol Tablets aimed as per directions will neutralize elimination and neutralize the acid condition responsible for rheumatic condition. For quick relief of pain use 5-grain Su-thol Tablets.

THANKFUL LETTERS

NEWARK, N. J.—"Dear Sir: I am 18 years old and for several years have suffered with rheumatism and had tried many things advised but to no avail until I read about the Cardiol Tablets. I procured them at Petty's Pharmacy and I am already feeling better and will soon get back to work. I am the happiest girl in Newark and wish to tell the world about Cardiol Tablets. Yours Truly (Signed) Helen M. Alpaugh, 235 Fairmont Ave."

* * *

CHICAGO, ILL.—"Dear Sirs: I am recommending Triopeptine Tablets. Have told some of my friends about them and that's how now using them. I had been troubled with indigestion which caused me to have cramps so that I could not do my housework. I was much relieved after using one box that I am going to keep a box on hand all the time, etc. Yours truly, (a friend) Mrs. L. Clay, 3045 Fifth Ave."

* * *

ALTON, ILL.—"Dear Sirs: I am writing to tell you that I have taken one box of Extracts of Tablets and they did me so much good that I have bought another box. I was suffering something terrible with kidneys and bladder, so much that I thought I would have to go to a hospital. I saw Farnwell recommended in your health questions, proceed using Thrio-Sulphoid. Mrs. Clara Cain, 1119 Piasa St."

TOLEDO, OHIO.—"Dear Sirs: I have used Cascu-Royal Pills and 5-grain Su-thol Tablets with wonderful results. I had been suffering with neuritis for some time and couldn't sleep, because of the pain. I took two Su-thol Tablets one night and slept well, so you know how much I appreciate them. As a laxative-cleanser, I have found nothing to beat Cascu-Royal Pills. (Signed) Mrs. Dillingham, 821 Moore Street."

* * *

DES MOINES, IOWA.—"Dear Sir: I have two babies, aged 2 and 3 years, and every winter they take colds that hang on and they are croupy at night. Last winter a friend told me about Mentho-Laxene and I tried it and believe me now I would not be without it. The fact that it doesn't take 2 or 3 bottles to break up a cold, makes it unequaled and then too, it acts as a laxative, and all in all it cannot be beat. Respectfully (Signed) Mrs. B. A. Dennis, 1448 West 8th St."

* * *

SPRINGFIELD, VERMONT.—"Dear Sir: I want to write to tell you of the good Cadomene Tablets did for me. I was all rundown and nervous as a result of la grippe. I was so nervous I could not sleep and had no appetite. I went from 155 pounds down to 110 pounds. I didn't care if I lived or died. I didn't want anyone to see me. I looked an hag. Now I feel fine and can eat and sleep well and am gaining in flesh. Have since used Su-thol Pain Tablets with great results. Yours truly, (Signed) Mrs. E. E. Green."

LEARN TO PLAY THE PIANO FREE

Read What These World-Famous Pianists Say About W. Scott Grove's 24-Lesson Course in Piano Playing—

To Mr. W. Scott Grove
Dear Sir.
I consider your Music Simplifier a very useful improvement in Piano teaching—
Truly yours
T. S. Lofgren

"You have my deep admiration when, in this age of commercialization, you try to teach and develop the musical side of young people. Your lessons are ideal for both young and old. Allow me to compliment you on them."

—Ignace Jan Paderewski.

"In looking over your Music Simplifier Course in Piano Playing, I find it a very good way of overcoming some of the elementary difficulties of piano study. I wish you much success. With best regards, I am,

"Sincerely yours,
"Rudolph Ganz."

STARTING SUNDAY, FEB. 1st

And Continuing Every Sunday for 24 Weeks in the

SUN-TELEGRAPH

Sunday, Feb. 1st, you will begin the first lesson, not knowing one note from the other.

You will place the instructions, as they appear in the Sun-Telegraph, over the keyboard of the piano. You'll learn the fundamentals in an interesting manner. After the first lesson you will be able to play three chords of D major.

This course is so simple that any child can, by its aid, be started on the way to proficiency on the piano or organ. The fundamental principles in music must first be mastered . . . that is essential. The Music Simplifier Course in Piano Playing teaches the fundamental principles in the easiest and simplest manner possible. It makes the learning a pleasure study by making it fascinating. You know at all times what you are doing, why you are doing it, and what progress you are making.

The author of the plan believes that any person will reach the point where he can play simple popular music, and if he wants to get beyond that, and in all probability he will, Pittsburgh instruction offers the best possible training.

Be sure to get these lessons from the start. Each lesson will be printed one time only. Remember there are 24 of them. Lesson 1 Sunday, Feb. 1st.

LONDON, Jan. 24.—The highlight of social life in England this week was supplied by the hunt ball given by Victor Emanuel, Manhasset (N. Y.) millionaire, in the historic Castle of Rockingham in Midlands. Emanuel leased the castle from Sir Michael Culme-Seymour.

A special ballroom was constructed for the occasion, with hedges and formal gardens and a black and gold decorative scheme. The old castle rang with merriment and American jazz music rent the welkin.

The guests included Lord Londonderry, Lord and Lady Burghley, Prince Dmitri, the Marchioness of Cambridge, Earl and Countess Beatty, the Earl of Sefton, Lord and Lady Ebrington and Lord Borodale. Five hundred guests attended. Mrs. Emanuel and her sister, Mrs. Ziegler, received.

Princess Mary and her husband, the Earl of Harewood, were guests at a wedding reception in their own home this week.

They placed Chesterfield House, which is one of the finest private mansions in London, at the disposal of Sir Harry and Lady Joan Verney for the reception following Miss Joy Verney's wedding at St. Margaret's, Westminster.

The bridegroom, Gustavus Hamilton-Russell, is a nephew of Lord Harewood, and the Verneys are close friends of the royal family.

The gift of King George and Queen Mary to the bride was a long diamond brooch with a star sapphire surrounded by diamonds.

Club Women To Hear Birth Control Talks

"A Valid Case Has Been Presented for Birth Control" is the subject upon which Dr. Roswell Johnson and Dr. Theodore Diller will debate before the Allegheny County Federation of Women's Clubs Friday afternoon in the Congress of Clubs. Mrs. F. B. Heyser, first vice president of the Outlook Alliance, which is the hostess club, will make the address of welcome at the morning session and this will be followed by reports and election of officers and an address on County Courts by District Attorney Andrew T. Park.

Board to Entertain By New Era Club

Members of the New Era Club will be entertained on Wednesday afternoon by the board of managers of the Christian Home for Women, North Side. Mrs. John Howard Phillips, a member of both organizations, will be chairman for the day and will tell of the Oberammergau Passion Play, showing exclusive motion pictures of it. Syria Ladies' Choral will sing.

Pittsburgh Girl Marries Detroit Man

Announcement has been made of the marriage of Miss Sally McCaffrey, and Edward J. Nebel, of Detroit, which took place Tuesday morning at 9 o'clock in St. Lawrence's Church.

The bride was given in marriage by her brother-in-law, Paul H. Dixon. Her gown was of white lace and she wore a hat of white tulle. Her arm bouquet was of sweetheart roses and lilies of the valley. The matron of honor, her sister, Mrs. Paul H. Dixon, wore peach colored chiffon with a jacket of the same material banded with sable. She wore a hat of peach taffeta and brown velvet. The maid of honor, Miss Eleanor Dunlevy, wore a similar gown of turquoise blue chiffon. Both carried tea roses, larkspur and lilies of the valley. Louis Nebel, of Detroit, served as his brother's best man, and the ushers included John M. Stewart and Joseph V. Gocke, of Pittsburgh.

The wedding breakfast was served in the Hotel Schenley, and Mrs. Dixon gave a reception in her home for 100 guests in the afternoon. After the reception Mr. and Mrs. Nebel left for Bermuda, and upon their return will make their home in Friendship avenue. The bride is

SIMPLE TO LOSE A POUND OF FAT A DAY ON A FULL STOMACH

Do Just These Two Simple Things . . . Fat Melts Away

MODERN science has made important recent discoveries in fat reduction. You can lose four to seven pounds a week, if you are a normal overweight person, on a FULL STOMACH. Instead of tiring exercises and starvation, you now—through a simple substitution of foods—know never a hungry moment and YET GROW SLENDER—See your excess fat fade away safely, comfortably in a simple, healthful way. To stay fat now is folly. You can look so much better, feel so much better and enjoy life so much more fully that it's foolish not to.

WHAT YOU DO

There are just two simple things to do: Clear your system—and keep it clear of waste matter, toxins and depleting poisons with ordinary JAD SALTS obtainable at any drug store. Start with two teaspoonfuls in a full glass of water tomorrow morning—a sparkling and pleasant drink.

Then EAT YOUR FILL—as much as your appetite can stand—of meals consisting of the following foods:

At breakfast eat two oranges or the juice of two oranges. Eat also two slices of toasted whole wheat or bran bread. Eat rolled oats (with milk, not cream).

At luncheon eat a good size piece of lean meat, then see how much spinach, lettuce, sauerkraut, boiled cabbage, green peas, broccoli or fresh turnips you can eat. EAT ALL YOU CAN COMFORTABLY HOLD of these foods. For dessert have any fresh fruit: cantaloupe, berries, apples, sliced oranges, pears—any except bananas. Substitute turnips for potatoes. Substitute lean meats—beef, chicken, veal, white fish, trout, bass, etc.—for pork or any fat meats.

At night, have another FILL-UP-FULL meal as above. Cut down on butter and sweets—eat half of what you eat now. That's easy. For with your stomach full of other foods, you'll never notice it. Drink water or not as you like.

4 TO 7 POUNDS GONE IN WEEK

At the end of a week you'll see the scale down four to seven pounds—according to how much overweight you are—from what you weighed the day you started. Your health, too, will be better. You'll be more active, more vigorous than perhaps for years. Your friends will soon begin to notice your increasing slenderness. You'll soon avoid the embarrassment of being called fat or bulky. AND—you'll do it with NEVER A HUNGRY MOMENT!

If in doubt about this safe and simple way, ASK ANY DOCTOR. Show him this article. Ask him whether or not it is safe and sure. It marks the latest findings of scientific men in the field of weight reduction. For it performs two necessary and important functions.

The JAD SALTS clear the bowels and system of the excessive toxins most overweight people have. *The change in diet—the FILLING OF THE STOMACH TO ITS LIMIT—with foods that turn to energy instead of fat decrease the weight day by day. The salts build up your health. The change in food eases off the fat.

Start today. Clip this dietary out and save it. Get box package of ordinary JAD SALTS for the cleansing part of the method at any drug store. Enough for month costs less than a dollar.

*Note particularly—the salts are urged purely as a poison-banishing agent—not as a reducing. The change in food does the work.

Club Groups Of Dormont Will Meet

The dramatic department of Dormont New Century Club will meet tomorrow afternoon in the home of Mrs. J. M. Weaver, Washington road, with Mrs. H. E. Roemhild as assistant hostess. The afternoon's program will include vocal trios by Mrs. E. E. Dick, Mrs. H. F. Hanks and Mrs. F. M. Hammond, and a review of Ervine's play, "The First Mrs. Fraser," by Mrs. Charles J. Bowlus.

On Tuesday afternoon the literary department will be entertained in Mrs. H. A. Heck's home, Peermont avenue. Joint hostesses will be Mrs. T. M. Stahlman, Mrs. N. H. Sanner and Mrs. Charles Porter. Mrs. H. M. White will discuss current events; Mrs. S. W. Corcoran will review "The Great Meadow," by Roberts, and Mrs. R. B. Cuthbert will review "Heirs," by Cannon.

The dramatic department's social committee is in charge of arrangements for a benefit bridge, to be held Thursday afternoon in the South Hills Theater. Mrs. W. M. Hall is chairman of the committee, which also includes Mrs. Brice R. Owens, Mrs. C. G. Moore, Mrs. J. W. Young and Mrs. Phil A. Franklin.

Female College Group to Meet

Assisting Mrs. Robert J. Bailey at tomorrow's meeting of the Pittsburgh Female College Association will be Mrs. William H. Watt, Mrs. Katherine L. Clifford, Mrs. William J. Askin, Miss Emma Gordon, Mrs. Robert M. Repp, Mrs. Bessie Hockswender, Mrs. Arthur B. Siviter, Mrs. J. W. Fleming, Mrs. A. C. Shaw and Mrs. S. B. Linhart.

The meeting will be held, as usual, in the College Club and will have a program consisting of music by Mrs. Siviter and a play entitled "Seven to One."

Vassar's Italian Head to Lecture

Dr. Bruno Roselli, head of the Italian department, Vassar College, writer and lecturer on Italian literature, art and archaeology, student of and lecturer on international economic affairs, will address the Twentieth Century Club tomorrow morning. His subject is "Whither Womankind."

The two plays, "Between the Soup and the Savory" and "The Pros and Cons," which the drama committee was to have presented last Thursday, will be given this week.

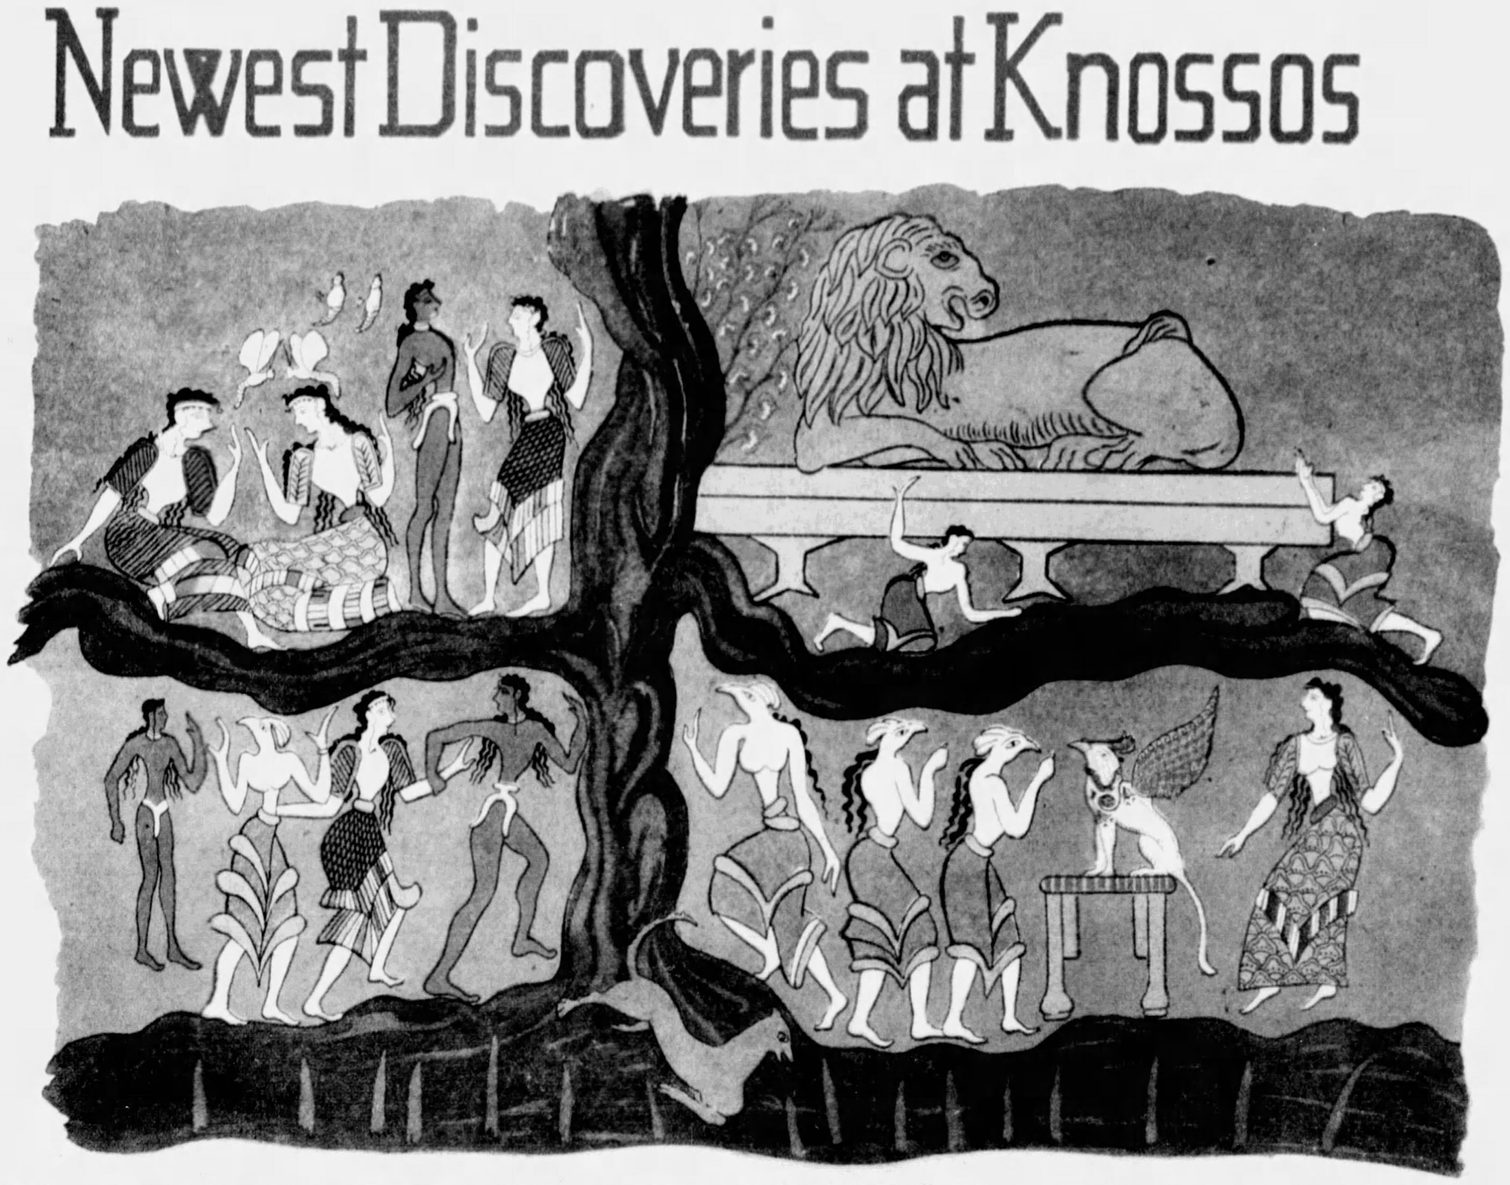
Newest Discoveries at Knossos



A Girl Bull-Leaper, Wearing the Metal Girdle Which Was Riveted On Minoan Children at an Early Age to Produce Their Disproportionately Slender Waists.

Interesting Ideas of the Life Beyond the Grave by an Ancient People Who Thought of Human Souls as Butterflies, and Riveted Metal Bands Around Their Children So They Would Grow Up With "Wasp-Waists"

(Concluded from Last Sunday)

THE Minoans, the ancient inhabitants of the island of Crete, some of whose interesting customs were described in the preceding number of this magazine, was one of the first civilized races to teach that man has an immortal soul. They believed that the soul's good and evil deeds were weighed in the balance after death, and that its happiness or sorrow in the world beyond the grave depended upon the result of this weighing.

Sir Arthur Evans, the distinguished English archeologist, who has been carrying on the excavations at Knossos, once the great city of the Minoans, discovered this, and discusses it in his latest volume on "The Palace of Minos at Knossos," recently published by Macmillan and Company, Ltd., London.

The ideas of the Minoans about the future life have some similarities to those of the ancient Egyptians. Both believed, as do many Christians today, in a Judgment of the Dead. But while the Egyptians thought that a man-god, Osiris, was the dread judge, the Minoans thought that the judge was a goddess.

The old Greeks symbolized the soul as a girl with butterfly wings. They named her Psyche—from which we get the words psychology, psychological and so on. Two thousand years before the first appearance of Psyche in Greek writings the Minoans symbolized the soul as a butterfly.

Sir Arthur Evans was fortunate in finding, among other long-hidden treasures, a ring set with a gem upon which is engraved a scene portraying the Minoan conception of the Judgment of the Dead. He has reason for supposing this scene to be a miniature reproduction of a wall painting, long since destroyed, in the temple chamber or shrine of the palace at Knossos wherein the worship of the Minoans' Great Goddess took place. He believes it was reproduced also in various other shrines of the Minoan cities, in the same manner that paintings of the Resurrection are duplicated in Christian churches. He has had the scene reconstructed in color as it probably appeared in these frescoes, and his reconstruction is shown on this page.

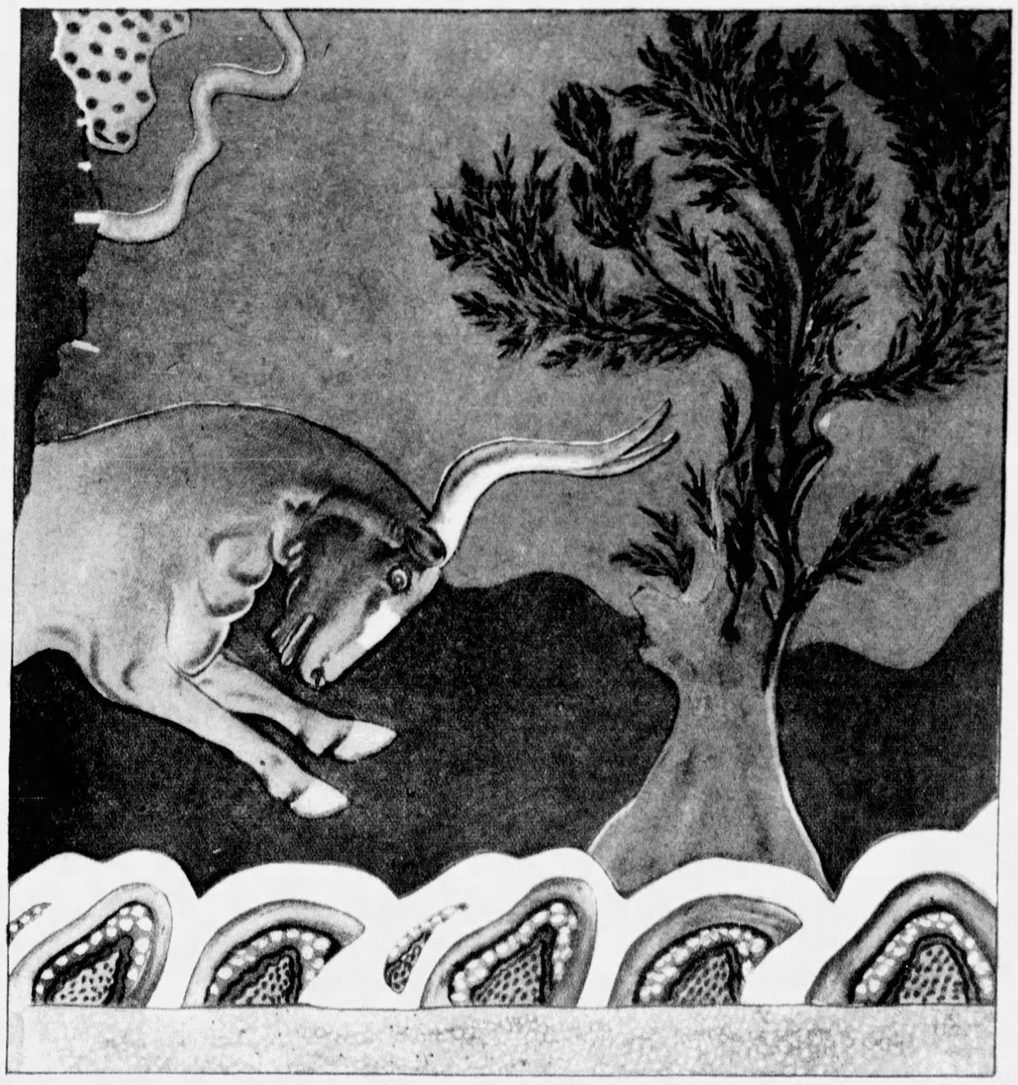
The picture is divided in four parts by the trunk, branches and roots of a tree. This is comparable, Sir Arthur points out, to the gigantic Ash Tree of old Scandinavian mythology, which was named Yggdrasil, whose branches covered the whole world and whose top disappeared into the sky. Yggdrasil had three roots, one of which was supposed to reach to the Abode of the Gods, another to the Land of the Giants and the third to Hella, the underworld. It may be that the Norsemen, who were indefatigable seafarers, got their idea of Yggdrasil from Crete.

In the first compartment of the Minoan painting is the Great Goddess in animated conversation with a companion. Above her head flutter two butterflies, and above them are two chrysalises out of which they have just hatched. At the right is a youth facing a short-skirted girl, who shows her surprise at the meeting by holding up both hands. We see here, writes Sir Arthur, a young couple whom Death had parted, reunited by the life-giving power of the Goddess; their entrance into the life beyond is symbolized by the pictures of the two butterflies emerged from their cocoons. They are not a pair of pale shades or phantoms, but material beings.

The girl on the right might well be saying, he poetically points out, quoting Wadsworth's "Laodamia":

"No spectre greets me—no vain shadow this;
Come, blooming hero, place thee by my side!
Give, on this well-known couch, one nuptial kiss
To me this day a second time thy bride!"

In the next compartment, right of the trunk, is the Sacred Lion of the Goddess, tended by two of her handmaidens. He is keeping watch over the entrance.



"The Most Magnificent Fragment." Part of a Painted Frieze in the Knossos Palace Showing a Bull-Hunting Scene. Reconstruction by M. E. Gillieron, Fils.

Illustrations from "The Palace of Minos at Knossos," by Sir Arthur Evans, Published by Macmillan and Company, Ltd., London.

The Judgment of the Dead, According to the Religious Beliefs of the Ancient Minoans 4,000 Years Ago. A Reconstruction in Color, Under the Direction of Sir Arthur Evans, of a Destroyed Fresco in the Ruined Palace of Minos at Knossos, on the Island of Crete. All the Figures Are Wearing the Waist-Constricting Metal Girdle.

In the bottom left compartment the young couple reappear, dancing happily onward, while a "griffin lady"—the griffin was a fantastic, mythological monster, with an eagle's head and wings and a lion's body—warns off another man, but just why she does this is not explained.

On the other side other "griffin ladies" wait to lead the happy pair to a winged griffin, behind which stands another female personage, a repetition of the Goddess herself. A pre-eminent characteristic of the griffin was its piercing sight, which qualifies him here for his post as Chief Inquisitor, or Soul Searcher.

On the mound at the foot of the Tree is a dog-like monster comparable in a way to the dragon, the loathly "Nidhoggr," who gnaws at the foot of Yggdrasil—another curious resemblance to the Norse legend.

"There is no gloom about the picture," writes Sir Arthur. "All alike wear fashionable raiment, reflecting indeed the latest modes. We have not here the Hades of primitive Greek tradition—the gloomy underworld of pale shadows and gibbering ghosts. It is an abode rather of light than of darkness."

In short, the Minoans had a bright and cheerful religious faith and something really enjoyable to look forward to after death.

The extreme "wasp-waists" of the figures shown upon the frescoes had long been supposed to be an artistic convention, like the stiff attitudes of Egyptian sculptures and paintings. It has now been learned that the Minoans actually did have these pinched-in waists of disproportionate slenderness.

They acquired them by metal belts which were riveted around them in childhood.

Remains of some of these "ring-corsets" have been unearthed. They were from six to eight inches in diameter, their metal edges turned outward to prevent chafing, and sometimes, for too tender bodies, they were padded.

At first, the archeologist writes, he could not believe that these metal rings were for any such purpose. They were so small that, considering the vital ducts and vessels involved in such constriction below the ribs, the wearing of them seemed an impossible interference with nature. He consulted many eminent physicians, however, among them Lord Moynihan, President of the Royal College of Surgeons, London, and Sir Humphrey Rolleston, Professor of Medicine at Cambridge. The medical verdict was that the growing bodies would adapt themselves to the condition, and that the constriction would "remain a permanency for at least a greater part of the wearers' lives without patent injury to the health of the subject."

If the frescoes can be taken as being in proper proportion, the waists of young men and girls averaged less than twenty inches in circumference!

It appears, though, that some concession was made to the increased girth of advanced maturity. The riveted metal belt was removed and a more comfortable one of leather was substituted.

The Minoans were fond of bull-hunting, and in the palace was found what Sir Arthur calls "The Most Magnificent Fragment," a part of a frieze depicting this sport. Only the fragment shown on this page remains, but it reveals the high degree of art attained by this remarkable lost civilization, about which more will be told on these pages later on.

Daredevil Trapeze Stunt and How the Acrobats Do It

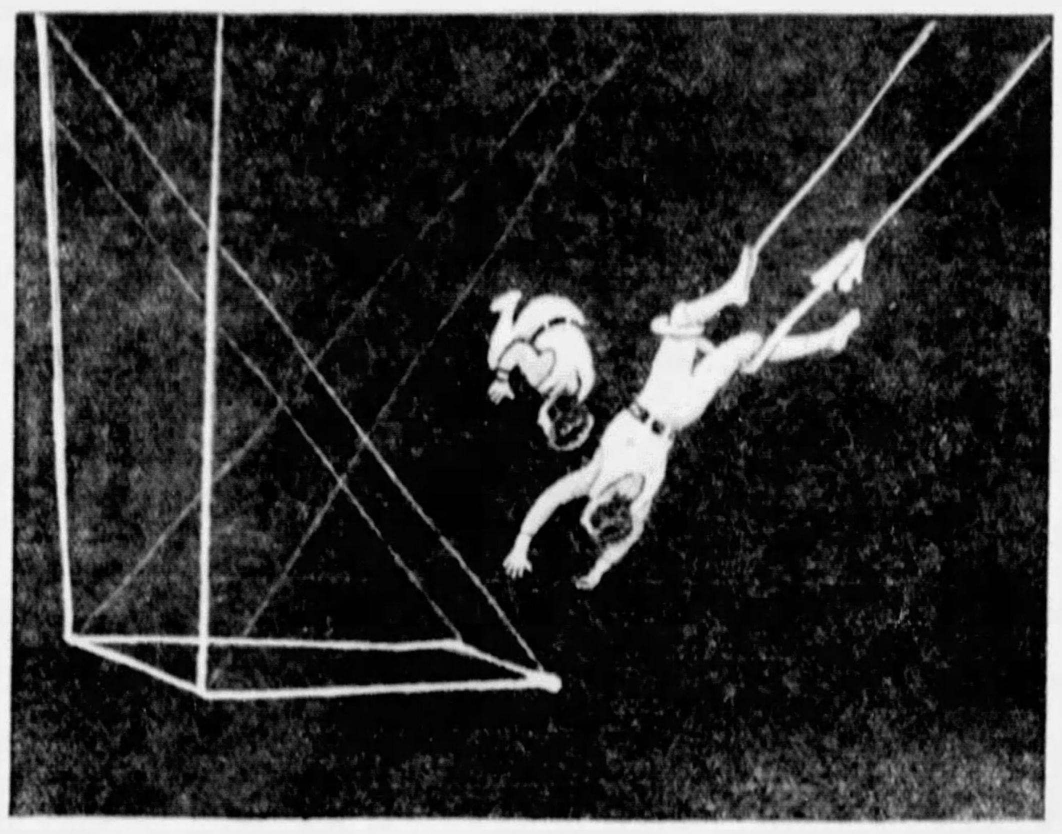
This Is Known as a "Double Pass." The Two Male Acrobats Have a Girl Partner. The Carrier Has Supplied Her With Momentum Enough to Carry Her to the Flier's Trapeze. At This Moment, the Trapeze Toward Which She Is Sailing Reaches Its Farthest Stretch and Releases the Flier, Who Passes Over Her in the Air, Almost Grazing Her Body, and Is, in Turn, Caught by the Carrier.



The Flier Is Still Doubled Up and Is Finishing His Third Somersault. Completing His Turn He Will Then Find Himself Face to Face With the Carrier, Who, Checking or Accelerating His Own Swing, Will Seize Him by the Wrists. The Angle From Which the Photograph Was Taken Makes the Men Seem Closer Than They Really Are. Both Swings Are Actually Quite a Distance Apart.

P[illegible] [illegible] trapeze [illegible] in 1859. But [illegible] the [illegible] performed at the [illegible] Winter [illegible]

[illegible] trapeze performers [illegible] the spectators' hearts palpitate [illegible] triple somersault and a [illegible] feet above the floor [illegible] auditorium.

[illegible] diagram at the left and the [illegible] at the extreme right of the [illegible] show how the triple somersault, the most difficult and dangerous of trapeze stunts, is performed. It is needless to explain that the trick is an achievement in timing which has to be done with mathematical precision. Cool-headedness and great physical courage are the human elements in the feat.

At the start of the stunt, as shown in the diagram, the flier (the athlete who makes the triple somersault) and the carrier (the athlete who catches the flier by the wrists the instant he completes his third turn) take their positions on trapezes hanging perpendicular.

Both start swinging, the flier holding to the bar of his trapeze with his hands, and the carrier hanging by his knees so that his hands are free to catch his partner. The athletes themselves do not know exactly how they synchronize their swings, which are not the same. They know, by long and arduous practice, when they are in the right relation to each other.

The flier, as the diagram shows, lets go of his trapeze when it is at the top of its swing and makes his first and second somersaults at an even higher point than the top of his swing. At about the instant that he is completing his second turn the carrier is at the top of his swing and starts downward again. The carrier's trapeze has fallen several feet by the time the flier finishes his third somersault and their hands lock at the instant the flier starts to fall downward.

In the photograph at the extreme right the flier is shown completing his third somersault and at the instant he is about to stretch out his arms so that his partner can catch him.

The "double pass," shown in the photograph in the center of the page, is more thrilling, and as dangerous and difficult as the triple somersault. In this trick the carrier, hanging by his knees, swings with the girl partner held by the ankles. The flier on the other trapeze holds to the bar with his hands and swings just as he did in the triple somersault trick.

At the instant that the two trapezes are swinging toward each other and the proper distance apart the carrier lets go of the girl's ankles and she sails through the air to catch the bar of the trapeze of the flier. The instant she leaves the carrier's hands the flier shoots over the top of his trapeze and above the body of the girl. The girl catches the bar of the trapeze the flier has just left, and the flier catches the hands of the carrier who, a split second before, has let go of the girl's ankles. If the acrobats misjudged this stunt by as little as an inch they might all fall and be seriously injured, if not killed.

The Supremely Beautiful Face?

T[illegible] few masters and art critics who have seen the original of [illegible] painting reproduced at the [illegible] agreed that it is one of the finest Madonnas ever painted. And some of them regard it as the supremely beautiful face as depicted by an artist's brush.

Whether this picture, which was painted by Joseph Gray Kitchell, one of America's leading artists, and [illegible] "The Spirit of Motherhood," is the most beautiful maternal face [illegible] is a moot question that [illegible] must decide for himself. But the painting itself [illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible] picture of all these faces combined in a single face.

Then he eliminated all the so-called "false lines" that did not contribute to the face and made a painting in black and white, a painting which might be called the first draft of the composite face.

When the black-and-white portrait was completed he used it as the model for a picture painted in full color. This served as the model for the final form of the "supremely beautiful face," which is what Mr. Kitchell calls a Mezzotone.

A Mezzotone is a picture requiring two planes, one over the other and slightly separated from each other. The plane nearest the eye is made of [illegible] kind of handmade thread silk on which certain parts of the picture are painted. It is rendered translucent by [illegible] oil, so that the details of the painting on the surface beneath the silk can be seen [illegible]. The effect is one of softness and depth which surpasses the efforts of even the ablest of the old masters.

It is estimated that the 271 Madonnas [illegible] "The Spirit of Motherhood" have a present market value of $100,000,000. The genius that went into their creation represents the best artistic talent of the world over a period of three centuries.

"The Spirit of Motherhood," in Which the Artist Has Combined the Features of 271 Priceless Madonnas With the Idea of Making a Composite Retaining in One Picture All the Virtues in a Large Group of Masterpieces.

A Hurricane's "Thumb Prints"

FOR many years forestry experts have been mystified by lop-sided growth rings in tree trunks cut in various parts of the country, but more especially in the open country of the Midwest and along the coast of the Gulf of Mexico.

The wood in these abnormal growths is usually of a duller color than the normal growth rings and of different texture. For want of a better name, foresters called this "compression wood" because of its peculiar lengthwise shrinkage in drying.

Scientists of the Forest Products Laboratory, which is a branch of the U. S. Forest Service, recently stumbled on the explanation of the mystery while they were examining pulp wood cut in the forests of Florida. It was observed that almost every log in a shipment of pulp wood had lop-sided growths of "compression wood" and it was known that the trees were in the path of the violent and destructive hurricane that swept a portion of the Florida coast in the Fall of 1926.

The answer to the mystery at once became plain—trees attempt to protect themselves from the attack of high winds by fortifying themselves with additional wood. Naturally these lop-sided rings grow on the side of the tree opposite the direction of the wind, so that the trunk will not bend or break so easily. In short, these scallop-shaped and half-moon-shaped growths of "compression wood" are the thumb prints of hurricanes and lesser attacks of wind.

A study of trees in Florida revealed that the greatest growth of "compression wood" was high up on the trunk, where the wind hits hardest and where the tree is weakest and more liable to break under pressure.

Thousands of trees were uprooted and broken off in the Florida hurricane of 1926 and acres of timber that survived the wind remained bent over for two years after the catastrophe. In fact, when some of the trees were cut two years after the violent blow they were still bowed over as though a strong rope were pulling their tops toward the ground. An examination showed their trunks to have extra growth on one side only.

Now that the scientists have a plausible explanation for the uneven and unnatural appearance of one-sided rings of "compression wood" in trees growing in widely separated sections of the country they believe that they can, by reading the story of the weather in growth rings, tell exactly when violent wind storms swept over any part of the North American continent.

Government forestry experts have, for many years, made a careful study of growth rings and have been able not only to tell years of heavy rainfall and of drought for a century or more back, but to predict the weather of the future because it is presumed that weather conditions occur in rather regular cycles.

Uncle Sam's Big Island Farm Where Your Fur Coats Are Raised

A [illegible] Bering Sea. The islands are 300 miles off the west coast of Alaska.

Eighty per cent of all the fur seals in the world are assembled there each season in their breeding season. There are more than a million seals on the islands, and last year 41,000 of their skins were sent to market. The islands also produce great numbers of the costly and much prized blue fox skins. It is supposed that the first blue foxes got there by accident, floating from the mainland on drifting ice. They now number thousands, and, for commercial purposes, have been semi-domesticated.

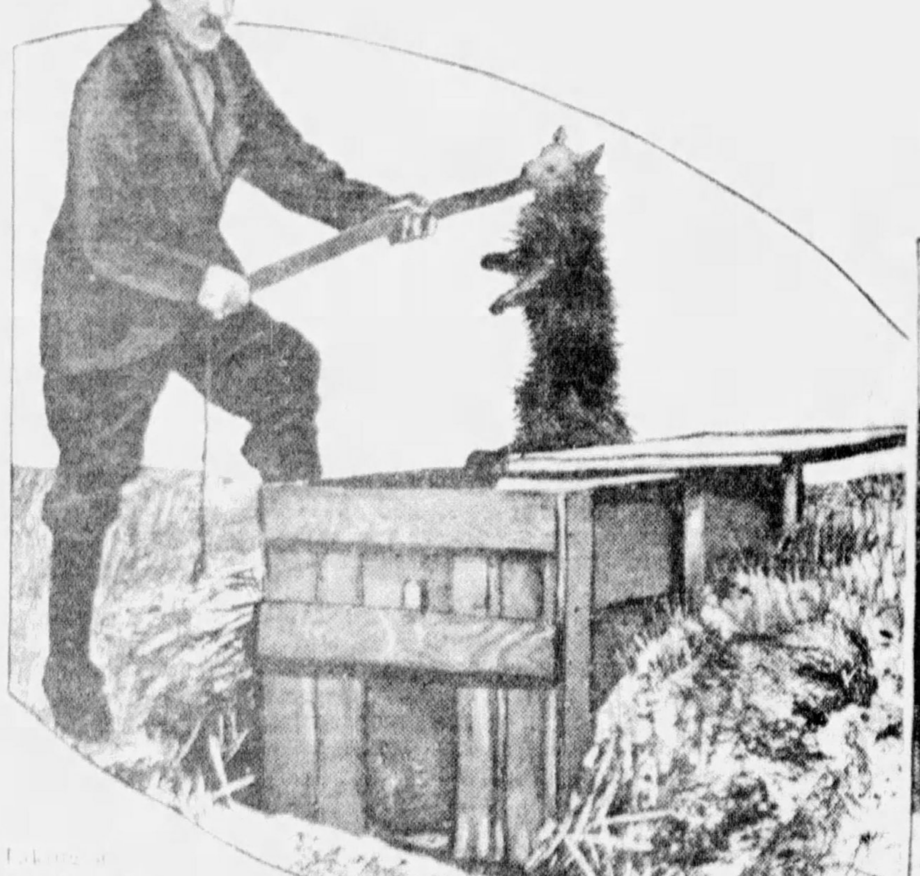
The blue fox is in a way a freak, a variant of the white Arctic fox. Its dark blue-gray hue is abnormal and rare. For some unexplained reason most of the foxes on the islands were found to be of this color when the Russians first discovered the Pribylofs.

The Russians, soon after they discovered the islands, established there a colony of Aleuts to carry on a profitable sealing industry. Descendants of these original colonists now comprise the population of the Pribylofs, numbering about 380. They reside in comfortable villages and perform all sealing and other fur gathering operations under the supervision of white agents employed by the Government Fisheries Bureau.

They get five dollars for each fox skin and seventy-five cents for each seal skin delivered. Their main compensation, however, comes to them in the form of foodstuffs and supplies furnished by the government.

When the government assumed control of sealing operations on the Pribylofs in 1912 there were only about 130,000 fur seals on the islands. To such an extent had the hunting of the animals at sea reduced a herd which had numbered millions. An international convention agreed to in 1911 by Great Britain, Japan, Russia and the United States put a stop to that.

As a result, since 1912 the herd has increased nine-fold. In the last eighteen years Uncle Sam's fur farm on the Pribylofs has yielded more than 380,000 seal skins.



Taking a Fox Out of a Box Trap With a Noose Is One of the Outdoor Sports on the Pribylof Islands. The Animals Are Semi-Domesticated and It Is Easy to Catch Them in This Manner.

The Aleuts of the Pribylof Islands Are of the Russian Orthodox Faith and Are Seen Carrying Sacred Paintings and Other Objects Called Icons.

A Valuable Catch. The Men Are Returning With a Number of Blue Fox Skins and One Extraordinarily Valuable White Fox Fur.

His Little Device for Telling When the Engine Is Running Hot Made Mr. Boyce a Millionaire—but When His Family Affairs Boiled Over, There Was Nothing He Could Do About It

ACME Photo

Mr. Harrison H. Boyce, Who Could, and Did, Invent a Device for Indicating When an Automobile Radiator Was Getting Too Hot, but Couldn't Keep His Own Matrimonial Affairs From Boiling Over.

John Athana, Who Has Sued Mr. Boyce for $1,000,000, Charging Him With Alienating His Wife's Love From Him.

M R. HARRISON H. BOYCE some time ago invented the Boyce Moto Meter, that sat on the radiator caps of automobiles.

Some people in those early days, seeing that little round disc at the extreme front of the bonnet of the car, supposed it must be a sort of sight by which the driver took aim at pedestrians. But that was not the idea. It was a thermometer that told the driver when his engine was overheating and likely to boil over. Also, in cold weather, it warned him when things were getting too chilly under the hood for efficiency, and perhaps might freeze.

The little instrument was so efficient in its day that it made Boyce a millionaire. If he could only have put his invention on the bonnets of his wives and other members of the family, he might have been warned of what was going on under the hood of womanhood and been able to fix things before they boiled over or froze up on him, thus saving a lot of alimony, alienation of affections suits and other grief.

In 1922, when Mr. Boyce had succeeded in getting his hot and cold warnings on about 1,000,000 cars, he had no idea that for some time his wife Marguerite's emotions had been slowly creeping up to the boiling point. Suddenly, one day, she exploded in his astonished face, with scalding words and a suit for divorce. In court she produced elevator boys, grocer and butcher delivery men, ice men, milk men and other back stairs specialists to prove that her husband had been living in an apartment at 25 Fifth Ave., New York City, with a tall and beautiful blonde, under the names of Mr. and Mrs. Boyce.

Mrs. Boyce said that she had had her husband's number for a long time but had been quietly waiting till she got the goods on him. Mr. Boyce had realized that perhaps their romance had not been sparking quite as vigorously as in its first years and there was considerable knocking. But that was to be expected of a marriage seventeen years old. If he had only had one of his own little thermometers on his wife's brow, he might have fixed things before it was too late. Mrs. Boyce won $2,000 a month alimony, the use of their mansion at Great Neck, Long Island, and the custody of their sixteen-year-old son, William Leander Boyce.

Two thousand dollars a month alimony might frighten some men out of trying matrimony again, but like all inventors, Mr. Boyce is an optimist. He promptly took a deep interest in Nancy and Jacqueline Hawthorne, two pretty daughters of a Long Island Railroad conductor who lived in Westbury. "Jacky" being only fourteen at the time, his interest was strictly paternal and he became, so he has asserted, her guardian, while he married her older sister, Nancy. All seemed to go smoothly with not too much friction, vibration or other cause for overheating, but again appearances were to prove deceitful. In reality there was not only boiling, but freezing, going on under some of the human hoods around him.

In 1926, Miss Jacky was old enough to fall in love and did so, confessing to her "Guardy" that she would like to marry Mr. John J. Athana, an upstanding young man who was all right in every way except that he really needed a better job. Like a typical, moving-picture, indulgent guardian Mr. Boyce fixed that by giving Mr. Athana a nice position in his business which now not only made the gadget to warn persons that things were getting dangerously hot, but a small semi-nonstealable fire-extinguisher for use in case they neglected the warnings. On the strength of this, Jackie and Johnnie were married.

Such fatherly treatment of her younger sister naturally made Mr. Boyce solid with the second Mrs. Boyce and he thought he needed no thermometer to know that she was not going to boil over on him. But last year Mrs. Athana's affections for her husband froze and they parted. Again Mr. Boyce came to the rescue, took the heart-broken husband for a trip with him on the Boyce yacht, the "Alone," and tried to cheer him up and tell him how to get along with a wife. After that he affected a reconciliation and again received his wife's approval and thanks.

But playing good samaritan and meddling in other people's troubles often is a dangerous business, especially for people with money enough to be worth suing. Mr. Athana's frozen wife soon walked out on him again and this time the husband did not come to Mr. Boyce for consolation, but for heart-balm, a million dollars worth of it in the form of a suit for alienation of his young wife's affections.

"Now who would have thought you were going to boil over on me?" gasped the inventor.

Mr. Athana replied:

"I guess you did not know that I was watching you at your apartment at 277 Park Ave. I know you had her out on the "Alone" all alone and you took her on trips to Georgia and other places. You wait till I get to court and show you what else I know."

Mr. Boyce turned pale. If a husband could imagine such things about him surely a wife would believe them and he hurried home expecting another explosion and scalding.

As Boyce approached the big new mansion at Jericho more fashionable but less literary and "arty" than Great Neck," he was dismayed to see that several reporters had arrived ahead of him and were interviewing his wife. He had preferred to break the news himself. Now there surely would be an explosion.

But, as usual, he was mistaken. The two sisters were sitting with arms entwined telling the newsmen how silly that ridiculous Athana person was to imagine such things of nice, fatherly, kindly Mr. Boyce. The delighted man paused in his hallway a moment, hardly able to believe his ears. It was his own wife, saying nice things about him, her own husband. She said, so it was reported at the time:

"My faith in my husband and sister is based on knowledge and truth. I am no misled wife. The suit is tragic because no matter how false it is proven to be, it will cast a shadow over us always, though it will be shown to be perfectly absurd."

Mr. Boyce almost wept with happiness. This was more than he had dreamed of. Millionaires are targets for taxes, duns for charities and envy but who ever heard of one getting sympathy before. It was almost worth the million that ungrateful husband wanted for heart-balm. So Mr. Boyce strode into the scene in the happy character of an abused martyr, a part that millionaires are not usually allowed to play.

The second Mrs. Boyce had such perfect confidence in him that she merely sniffed when the still furious Mr. Athana asked the court for the power to make Mrs. Athana answer the following list of mean questions:

"Did you on March 3, 1930, leave with Boyce for Brunswick, Georgia, by train, occupying a single compartment?

"Did you register with Boyce under assumed names at the Oglethorpe Hotel in that city? Were those names 'Mr. and Mrs. Vernon Hawthorne'?

"Did you in March, 1930, accompany Boyce to his yacht 'Alone' and live as man and wife with him?

"What apartments and hotels has Boyce lived in since March 14, 1930?

"Did he register under his own or an assumed name in them?

"Did Boyce promise gifts to you of clothing, jewels, flowers, money and a trip to Europe and did you get them?

"Did he induce you to leave your husband?

"Is he supporting you since then?"

The court decided that those were not nice questions to ask a lady before the trial and decreed that Mr. Athana would have to restrain his curiosity until the case came up. This was nice but the great thing was this perfect confidence his wife had in Mr. Boyce and her wonderful understanding. They were twin souls with but a single thought and needed no emotionmeter. If that would not make her boil over nothing would.

Just then, however, something unpleasant in a financial way happened. In the course of a suit Mr. Boyce had brought against the General Motors Corporation for infringement of his moto meter patents, the court held that the patents were no good. This meant a heavy curtailment in the millionaire's income so that the $2,000 a month alimony to the first Mrs. Boyce would begin to hurt. What was to be done? But somebody, some have said the second Mrs. Boyce, was right there with a helpful suggestion.

"You just go right to her and explain the situation," he was advised.

Mr. Boyce doubted this. It was his opinion that Marguerite would boil over worse than ever at the very suggestion. But he tried it and to his surprise the first Mrs. Boyce was nice and accepted the cut.

There remained just one more adjustment to be made, the second Mrs. Boyce would also have to accept a little cut in her allowance so that the inventor would be able to make his budget balance. But if his ex-wife who didn't love him any more had been so reasonable, Nancy, the wife of his bosom, who had such perfect understanding no doubt would be glad to help. So with no fear or misgivings he mentioned the matter, expecting his twin soul to say that she had already planned to do so.

Instead she blew up and boiled over worse than any one in the family, not only refusing with vigor and gestures but bringing suit against him for separation, $25,000 lawyers' fees and $5,000 a month alimony. In New York State had she asked for divorce it would have been necessary to say something about a corespondent, but not in a suit for separation, so it is not known whether her husband's request to reduce her allowance caused the present Mrs. Boyce to lose any of her beautiful faith in her younger sister or not.

"Tell her that you can't afford such enormous alimony any more, that it will drive you to the poorhouse and you won't be able to pay anything. I am sure she will be reasonable and let you cut it at least in half."

It has been asserted and denied that while Mr. Boyce was still smarting from that last hot water he had gotten into he and Jackie hurried right down to Mexico where one can get a divorce almost as quickly and easily as a cup of coffee at a cafetaria and that he bought himself one from Nancy and another for her sister Jackie from husband John Athana. If he did it won't do either of them much good for American courts don't accept these Mexican divorces any more than a "Mex" dollar, unless both husband and wife are parties to them. As Mr. Boyce's money and properties are in the U. S. A. that is where the divorce is important. Anyhow Mr. Boyce says he never made that Mexican trip.

And while Mr. Boyce was standing around waiting for his million-dollar alienation suit and his $60,000-a-year separation suit and Jacqueline's divorce suit to come to a boil, another member of the Hawthorne family without warning found himself in hot water. James Hawthorne, a young brother-in-law, suddenly saw his nineteen-year-old wife Eleanor Pratchett Hawthorne explode in his face. She claims to have caught him under compromising conditions with a school teacher friend. With Eleanor's suit, thus far there are four matrimonial suits simmering in the Boyce-Hawthorne family.

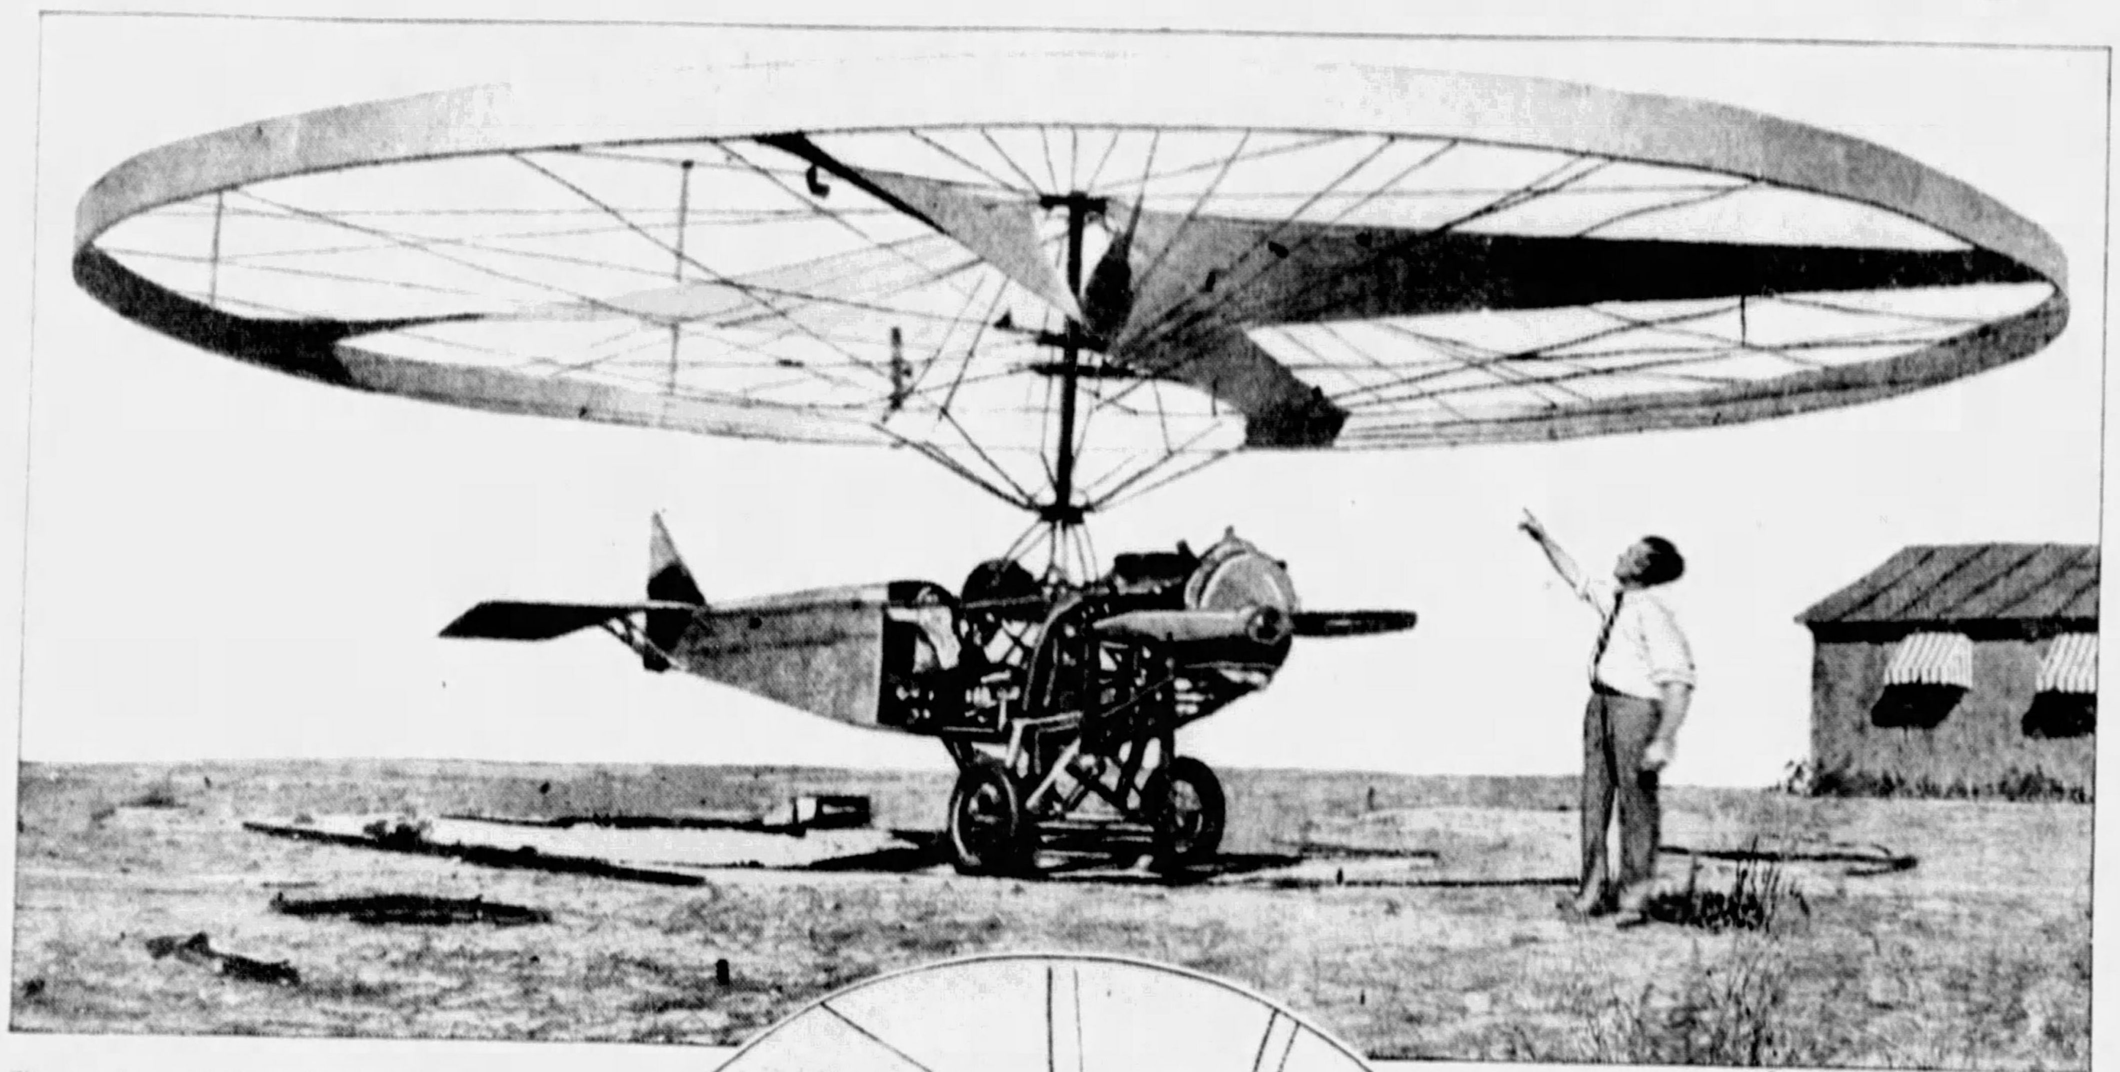
Straight Up, Straight Down With Safety, If This Strange Flying Machine Works

THE [illegible] of the [illegible] [illegible] aeronautical [illegible], will [illegible] [illegible] vertically [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] the [illegible] [illegible] that people [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] impossible.

With the invention of a practical [illegible] that can go straight up and [illegible] down, it is [illegible] that it [illegible] not be long before every good-sized city roof top would be a potential landing field and that thousands of people who never have been up in an aeroplane would take up flying as passengers and plane operators.

Many inventors have turned their talents to the problem of vertical flight since Juan de la Cierva, the Spanish aviator who conceived and developed the Autogiro, has proved that almost vertical [illegible] is possible. One of these ingenious pioneers, Jesse D. Langdon of Bell, California, is now at work on a curious plane which he calls the helio-gyrocopter, with which he hopes not only to fly straight up and straight down but also either backward or forward.

Two photographs of the strange looking plane are shown on this page. At first glance, the machine seems to be a combination of the standard plane in common use today and an immense windmill set parallel to the ground. And, in effect, that is exactly what the Langdon helio-gyrocopter is.



The fuselage of the helio-gyrocopter does not differ greatly from that of a plane in regular service over the airlanes at the moment. It has a two-bladed propeller, a rudder, ailerons and two rubber-tired wheels for landing. But the mechanical equipment within the fuselage differs radically from that in the ordinary plane—for it has two motors. One of these drives the two-bladed propeller and the other supplies the power for the windmill, or gyro.

This huge ring has four sail-like "spokes" which are pitched in the same manner as the blades of a four-bladed marine propeller. It is the function of this gyro to lift the plane straight off the ground and to lower the plane gently to earth at a speed not exceeding five miles an hour. Whether its function will be realized remains to be seen in a series of tests through which Mr. Langdon will put the machine in the near future.

The motor that pulls the machine forward can also be used to drive it backward, through ingenious gearing which makes the propeller quickly reversible. The other motor is, of course, connected with the gyro, or windmill, and is powerful enough to drive it at a rapid rate of speed.

The motors are connected by a clutch and can be operated independently or in conjunction. Strangely enough, both the two-bladed propeller and the gyro will be used when the operator wants to lift the plane straight off the ground. The inventor has figured it out mathematically that the forward pull of the motor connected to the propeller on the nose of the plane will not move the machine forward, but will contribute power to the vertical lift of the windmill.

Perhaps the helio-gyrocopter will not fly in the manner that its inventor thinks it will, but some aviation experts who have studied the plans of the machine are of the opinion that the device is theoretically designed to achieve the inventor's dream.

Mr. Langdon explains that the diameter of the gyro and the lifting power of the sails, when the gyro is whirling, is sufficient to lower the plane gently to the ground even when both motors are shut off.

The air pressure on the under sides of the sails would cause the gyro to rotate as the machine falls of its own weight and the buoyant effect of the rapidly rotating sails automatically would lower the plane to the ground at a speed not exceeding five miles an hour. With power applied to the gyro this speed would be reduced, so that the operator could land as though he were riding in a huge feather.

When the machine takes off, both engines are used, as has already been explained, and the helio-gyrocopter (if it works in the manner its inventor believes it will) will rise straight off the ground to any desired altitude. Then, when the pilot is as high as he wants to go, he shuts off the motor that operates the gyro and proceeds as though he were flying a standard-type plane.

When the gyro is not whirling, either to make vertical rising or vertical descent possible, it serves the purpose of wings and the air rushing against the under sides of its four sails gives the machine buoyancy.

He Claims the Curious Craft Will Be Able to Go Straight Up and Come Straight Down Without Danger, and Fly Backward or Forward. —And Above— Jesse D. Langdon, of Bell, California, and His Helio-Gyrocopter, a Craft Designed to Fly by Employing the Combined Principles of the Gyroscope, the Helicopter and the Aeroplane. It Has Two Motors, One for Operating the Propeller and the Other for the Gyro, Which, the Inventor Believes, Will Permit a Direct Descent at Five Miles an Hour.

The "Carideer." It is a Mixture of the Caribou and Reindeer, and Has Been Developed After a Period of Five Years by Government Experts at Nunivak, Off the Delta of the Yukon River. Its Value Lies Mainly in the Fact That It Is a Meat Producer.

U. S. Invents a New Animal

UNCLE SAM has invented a new domestic animal which is expected to prove of great value as a meat producer and for many other purposes. This remarkable beast has been developed through five years of experiments on the island of Nunivak, in Bering Sea, off the delta of the Yukon River, Alaska. It is called the "carideer."

These experiments were undertaken by the Government Biological Survey with the idea that it might be practicable to create a type of animal bigger than the reindeer, and an animal [illegible] superior to the reindeer by [illegible] breeding of a cross between the reindeer and its native American [illegible], the woodland caribou.

There are now more than 1,000,000 reindeer in Alaska. All of these are descended from 1,280 [illegible] imported in [illegible] in the early nineties for [illegible] [illegible] for the equivalent in trade goods and brought over on a revenue cutter. For the natives of Alaska, these animals have revolutionized economic conditions, and have lifted the Eskimo to a new plane of civilization by providing them with a domestic animal that furnishes meat, transportation, clothing and many other necessities.

The work of creating the "carideer" began with the difficult capture in the wilds of the upper Yukon of ten young and exceptionally fine male woodland caribou. That was in the Autumn of 1924. The animals were trapped by driving them into stockades, then roped by lassoing their horns, and "staked out" for the Winter.

In the following Spring they were transported on a barge down the Yukon to the coast, where they were put aboard a schooner which carried them to Nunivak Island.

Nunivak Island is 75 miles long by 40 miles wide. In preparation for the experiment in cross-breeding, a herd of 500 reindeer had been established on the island. From these were selected the largest and finest specimens for mating with the caribou.

As a result, there are now on the island several hundred of the cross-bred animals. It is planned to deliver each year fifty or more carefully selected bull "carideers" to the mainland for introduction into reindeer herds, with a view of improving the latter in point of size and in other respects.

The "carideer," developed by this method of selective cross-breeding, is 50 pounds heavier than either the reindeer or the caribou. It has superior stamina. In effect it is an entirely new animal. As the years go by, it will be distributed all over Alaska.

Cattlemen who have studied the new animal are of the opinion that, in spite of its greater size, it can stand the rigorous Alaskan climate better than either the reindeer or the caribou, and that it can thrive on tougher and scantier diet than the somewhat less hardy reindeer. The real value of the carideer will not, of course, be known for several years.

Stage Headdress Elaborate as a Queen's Crown

ELABORATE and costly headdresses are not unusual on the Parisian stage—in fact, every edition of the world-famous Folies Bergere boasts a dozen ornate and imaginative chapeaux. But it is seldom that a jeweler is called upon to make these things of precious stones and costly materials not ordinarily used in stage apparel.

The photograph illustrating this article shows a headdress comparatively simple in design, but which cost many thousands of dollars and required months of skilled labor. It was created by one of the leading jewelers of the French capital for an opera company and is as gorgeous as a queen's crown.

Rich brocade and heavy white silk are used to cover a light frame, the border of which is ornamented with perfectly matched pearls. More pearls decorate the lower edge of the helmet that fits over the head and six strings of larger pearls hang in a graceful loop to frame the wearer's face.

The entire surface of the silk and brocade creation is encrusted with tiny, luminous green glass beads especially made for the costly crown. These beads are the color of jade.

Miss Irene Hall, 20, of Boulder, California, and Her Husband, Gopal Singh Khalsa, One of Three Representatives in This Country of Mahatma Gandhi, of India. Miss Hall, Like Several Other Girls Who Have Married Polygamous Natives of the Orient, Will Live in India.

But Does She Love Him?

EAST may be East and West may be West, as Kipling poetically points out, but Irene Hall, pretty twenty-year-old freshman at the University of Colorado laughs at the idea that the twain can never meet. A few weeks ago she became the bride of turbaned and black-bearded Gopal Singh Khalsa, a Hindu nobleman visiting this country as a representative of Mahatma Gandhi.

Irene's parents apparently look upon the international match as a catastrophe, for her father's comment on the alliance was: "Ask them for particulars. Please don't bother us about it."

Mrs. Khalsa, all smiles and obviously happy, assured newspapermen that her wedding was the culmination of a "real love match" and that she expects to be very happy in spite of all the bugaboos that have come to be attached to such marriages.

Miss Hall first met her husband when he came to the University of Colorado to deliver a series of lectures. She is not at all backward in admitting that she was smitten by him the moment she set eyes on him and that her fascination was intensified when she heard him speak. The courtship began almost as soon as they met and moved rapidly on to its culmination.

Most of Irene's classmates and friends can't imagine her as the wife of a swarthy, bearded Hindu, even if he is young, well educated, wealthy and a power in Indian affairs. If she had married "Bluebeard" they could not have been more shocked.

Nancy Miller's friends felt the same way when that comely young society girl became the Ranee of Indore, and Britishers were frankly horrified when Mrs. Helen Wilson of London, became the Sultana of Johore in a Moslem marriage ceremony. Such alliances, they said, are seldom happy ones.

But the new Mrs. Khalsa is much too happy at the moment to worry about what people think of her choice of a husband, or her future. She is looking forward eagerly to the day when her husband's lecturing in this country will be finished and she sets sail with him for a honeymoon in Europe and a second elaborate marriage in India.

This ceremony, according to Gopal Singh Khalsa, will be performed according to the tenets of Sikhism, the faith of his people. Sikhism, he explained, is a liberal faith which does not recognize caste. "Our wedding in India," said the Hindu, "will be very elaborate. It will be performed in the Golden Temple at Amritsar, my home city, and will last for five days. I expect at least 700 guests to attend the rites."

The pretty co-ed's turbaned spouse was careful to explain that he considers himself thoroughly married now, and that the second and much more elaborate wedding ceremony is merely out of respect to the traditions of the country which is his and in which his American bride will live.

Mrs. Khalsa is excited and delighted at the prospect of being the lady of a Sikh nobleman, but she does not intend to quit her studies. She will, she says, attend Khalsa College in Amritsar and get her degree there.

Notions Grandpa Had Which Science Finds Are Really Correct

Thicker Fur on Wild Animals DOES Often Mean Severe Winters, Night Air IS "Unhealthy" in Some Places, Moonlight CAN Blind You, and Guilty People WERE Frequently Uncovered by Touching Their Tongues With a Poker and So On—But NOT for the Reasons Grandpa and His Ancestors Thought Legendary Figure of One of "The Little People," as the Fairies Used to Be Called.

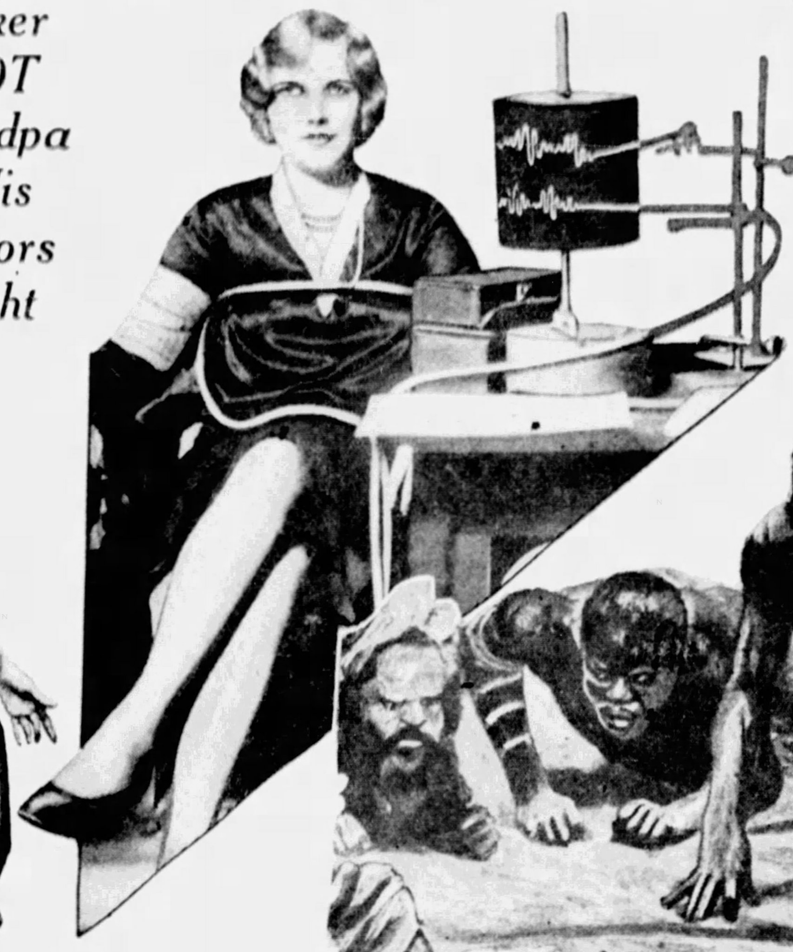
Science Now Believes That Instead of Being Wholly Imaginary the Fairies, or "Little People," Were Ancient Memories of a Race of Dwarfs Like These African Bushmen, or Pygmies, Who Once Inhabited Europe.



A Modern Psychological Test to Determine When the Subject Is Telling Truth and When Not. Lying Requires an Effort, Which Causes Slight Changes in the Pulse and Respiration, and Which Are Shown at Once by Apparatuses Designed for That Purpose. This Same Idea of Self-Betrayal Was the Basis of Many Ancient "Trials by Ordeal."

An Australian "Trial by Ordeal." If a Woman of the Tribe Is Suspected of Infidelity, the Priest Makes a Figure of Her in Sand and, After Incantations, Stabs It. If the Woman Is Guilty She Is Supposed to Die, and Often Actually Does—Through Fear.

SCIENCE, studying queer old notions in the light of modern discoveries, has found that a surprising number of them are correct. Primitive man, observing certain sets of facts for centuries, slowly learned that often there was a relation between some of these facts—if so-and-so was the case then so-and-so was extremely likely to happen. Many of their observations were entirely accurate, it now turns out. But their conclusions as to the causes, like "The Mikado's" flowers that bloom in the Spring, had nothing to do with the case.

When, for example, grandpa came in from the woods on an early Fall day and announced that they were going to have a hard Winter because the animals had thicker fur, it usually turned out to be true. Superficially such a belief seems utterly foolish, and had until recently been held by meteorologists to be as foolish as it seemed. How can an animal know in advance whether the Winter is to be cold or warm? And even if this knowledge were available, how could the animal itself provide for thicker or thinner fur? If, as the Bible says, man cannot by thinking add a single cubit to his stature, how can an animal add a single hair to its coat by thinking it is going to be cold?

And, of course, it cannot, and still grandpa was right—cold Winters do follow when the squirrel, the rabbit and other furred wild things have thicker coats. Nature, however, does not "tip off" her creatures to the coming conditions, as grandpa believed. The real reason is sun-spots.

That our weather is affected by the changes in the sun indicated by spots or eruptions on its face, is a comparatively recent discovery. In some countries, such as northern North America, there is some relationship between Summer weather and Winter weather. Experts studying these weather relations believe that, in general, one portion of the sun-spot cycle is characterized by years in which both rainfall and snowfall are high. The other part of the cycle contains years of little snow and also little Summer rain.

Plenty of rain in the Summer means in North America ample animal food. Therefore wild animals acquire thick, glossy fur coats. Little Summer rain means, on the other hand, thinner animal fur. On the average, as a result of this sun-spot cycle, a cold, snowy Winter will follow a wet Summer. A relatively warm and open Winter will follow a dry Summer. There will be exceptions, however, but the rule holds well enough to explain how grandpa got this idea. And so correct were his observations that the sun-spot cycle has been traced for forty years back in the profits of the Hudson Bay Company, an organization engaged chiefly in the collection of animal furs. Cold Winters did produce thicker, better furs, and therefore bigger profits.

Grandpa believed that night air is dangerous to the health, and especially damp night air in the neighborhood of swamp regions. He kept the windows carefully shut. Grandpa said that you "got malaria" from breathing such air. In fact, the word malaria means "bad air."

Now, as a matter of fact, damp air is usually more healthful than the overdry air of the average American dwelling; nor is there the slightest evidence that the air of swamps and marshes is a bit more unhealthful, considered merely as air, than the atmosphere of any other region. Nevertheless, grandpa again was right in his general conclusion—it is unhealthy to sleep with open windows in certain sections. What makes it so is not the air, however, but the mosquitoes.

These insects are the usual carriers of the germ of malaria, and sometimes those of other diseases. Mosquitoes live and breed chiefly in swampy places. They fly about mostly at dusk and bite people mostly after dark. Accordingly, before anything was known about the germs of disease or about the germ-carrying activities of mosquitoes, persons who slept out-of-doors in swampy regions became sick.

Since nothing seemed to be involved except the air, the disease produced received its name of malaria—"bad air." It never occurred to anyone to think of the mosquitoes flying in the night air as the real culprits.

Grandpa believed that sleeping with the moon shining on our eyes caused blindness, that meat spoiled more quickly if hung where the moon shone on it, and that seeds grew more quickly and strongly if planted at the new moon than if planted when the moon was on the wane. Modern science, after long doubting, says he was right—but not in his explanations of why these things occur.

The light we get from the moon is sunlight reflected from its surface. There are comparatively few heat rays left in it, these having been absorbed by the moon and by earth's upper atmosphere. This is why there is no warmth in moonlight. Also the reflected light is about 10 per cent "polarized." No one knows exactly what "polarization" is, but light of this character behaves quite differently than ordinary light. It has effects upon chemical reactions which ordinary light does not have; it is able to stimulate the growth of certain forms of bacteria, and also the growth of seedlings.

And now the distinguished Czecho-Slovakian chemist, Professor Bohuslav Brouner, has reported that moon blindness actually can be produced by allowing the light of the moon to enter the eye when held a little sidewise, so that it illuminates the particular spot in the eyeball where the filaments of the optic nerve enter the eye. It is apparently the polarization which affects the nerve filaments, since common light produces no such results. The blindness lasts in some cases for hours.

It was also found that due to the bacteria stimulating action of the polarized light, meat decomposed much more rapidly in moonlight than in darkness, or where no direct light could fall on it. The stimulation of seedlings noted may be the basis for the old notion of planting with the new moon, and some crops so planted may actually grow better than those of which the seeds were dropped in the "dark of the moon."

The Mosquito That Carries the Malaria Germ—And Was What Made Grandpa Think Night Air Was Bad for the Health.

Among the most interesting of notions, dating far back to primitive men and examined by modern scientific students, are those involving the idea of the trial by ordeal. Probably even grandpa believed that one way of discovering who had murdered a person was to have the suspects put their hands on the body and that when the guilty man did it, blood would flow from the wounds of the corpse. Many forms of this trial by ordeal were used, and science has found that a number have a sound psychological basis.

It is well known, for example, that a person can be driven insane by fear, or to suicide; also, that some people are so sensitive and ill-balanced that if they come to believe that they have some incurable disease, they will sometimes waste away and die, even though they have no disease at all.

In Australia, the Bushmen, about as primitive a race as any on earth, use this psychological fact in punishing unfaithful wives. The Medicine Man makes a figure of the suspected woman in sand, then while the husband and the men of his family and the men of his wife's family kneel around, the Medicine Man speaks certain charms and plunges his spear into the breast of the sand figure. If the wife is guilty she is supposed to die shortly after. If she is not guilty, the spear in the sand figure does not harm her.

Care is always taken to let the suspected woman know that this magical rite is going on. And if she is guilty, she almost invariably dies, not because of any incantations or magic, but because she believes in their efficacy so thoroughly that her belief kills her.

Another ordeal which not so long ago was applied to criminals, for example, was to thrust a suspected criminal's hand into a pot of molten lead. Tests by modern scientific men have proved that this feat really can be done without injury provided that the motion of the hand in and out of the molten metal is steady and reasonably rapid and provided that the surface of the hand is slightly moist with normal perspiration. Another ordeal which still survives in northern Africa is to touch the tongue of the suspected person with a red hot poker. After such a touch, an innocent person is supposed to be able still to produce saliva from his mouth. The mouth of a guilty person, on the other hand, is supposed to be dry.

Curiously enough, such ordeals have a considerable real basis, operating through the suspect's own knowledge of his innocence or guilt. An innocent person, himself believing in the validity of the trial by ordeal, anticipates no harm and will thrust his hand in and out of the molten lead steadily and harmlessly. In the ordeal by the hot poker against the tongue, an innocent suspect will continue normal secretion of the saliva in his mouth. A guilty person, on the other hand will expect to be detected. His hand will tremble in the lead and will be dry or over-moist before it is inserted. The mouth of such a guilty individual already will be dry even before the hot poker is applied.

No scientific man would maintain, of course, that such trials by ordeal are proper substitutes for modern methods of criminal inquiry. Nevertheless, it is probable that in most cases such ordeals really worked and indicated the truth, especially where the suspected persons themselves believed firmly in the adequacy of the ordeal.

Among other weather myths is the one of the sulphurous smell of the devil. Ball lightning, it has been pointed out, usually explodes with a loud noise and leaving a sulphur-like smell, really due to chemical gases generated in the air. Ball lightning is a rare phenomenon but unquestionably occurs. Frequently, the lightning balls enter houses down the chimneys or through similar openings. Primitive, unscientific people, confronted by such a glowing ball which promptly explodes with a sulphurous odor, naturally thought of the myth of demons and devils thus appearing and vanishing with loud noises and evil odors.

Another ancient belief, which modern science suspects that it has explained, is that of the famous "curse" supposed to be placed by supernatural agencies on persons who violate the tombs of former generations. Only a few months ago there was much discussion of how this traditional curse of the Egyptian priests was working against persons and families associated with the opening of the tomb of Pharaoh Tut-Ankh-Amen.

What actually explains, it is probable, the belief of many generations in the reality of such curses was discovered last year by Mr. Alan Rowe, an investigator in Egypt for the University of Pennsylvania. Mr. Rowe's expedition had found a tomb of the Fourth Dynasty, made about five thousand years ago. Attempting to enter the passageway leading to this tomb, Mr. Rowe's party found themselves fainting, acquiring sudden headaches and with their candles refusing to burn. Realizing the circumstances, the investigators beat an immediate retreat to the outer air. During its long enclosure in the tomb the air of the excavation had become exhausted of oxygen. Possibly there was present, also, some quantity of the poisonous gas, carbon monoxide, which may be formed under such conditions of long isolation from the outer air.

In the light of Mr. Rowe's experience it is easy to imagine how the idea of an effective curse on tomb openers might arise. Imagine a party not acquainted with modern science entering such a tomb, the air of which had become unbreathable. Neither the exhaustion of oxygen nor the presence of the poisonous carbon monoxide is perceptible by smell or in any other ordinary way. The victim who enters such vitiated air merely faints and dies. Only a modern physician or scientist would be able to imagine why. If one or two such parties in each generation died thus by venturing into tombs, it would be natural for the public to believe and keep alive the notion of some mysterious curse.

The explanation of the myth of giants and seven-league boots as a recollection of stilt walkers is due to another English folklore expert, Miss Alice B. Gomme. In ancient times, Miss Gomme pointed out recently in a communication to the Folk Lore Society, western Europe and a great part of southern England was covered with swamps, fens and marshes. These marshy lands were inhabited, but the race which lived therein was different from the agriculturists who lived in higher land surrounding these marshy areas. Inside the marshes the fen people had small spots of higher land where villages were built and settlements established. Perhaps a few raised roads or tracks led from these marsh villages to the higher land outside.

In moving about through their marsh lands the fen people commonly walked, as people still do in similar localities, on tall stilts. It is easy to see how the people of the surrounding higher lands would catch glimpses occasionally of these stilt-walking fen dwellers and would observe the apparently more than human speed with which these individuals could get over the ground. Kept by mutual distrust too far apart to discover the actual cause of the tallness and quick motion of the fen dwellers, the others imagined the mythical giants and the seven league boots to explain what they had seen.

An African expert in ancient myth and folklore, Mr. George H. Cameron, is responsible for the similar suggestion of the origin of the myth of fairies—"The Little People," as they used to be called. The cave paintings of France and Spain and much other evidence suggest, Mr. Cameron believes, that a race similar to the modern Bushmen of South Africa once occupied the western coast of Europe and parts of Great Britain and Ireland. With the passing of time this race had migrated southward into Africa, leaving behind it faint popular recollections of people smaller than ordinary and able to vanish quickly in the forests, which characteristics the shy and small-bodied Bushmen still possess.

There remain, of course, many popular superstitions which modern scientific students have not yet traced to their sources. There is no adequate explanation, for example, of the idea that the number 13 or the day Friday are unlucky. Sometimes these ideas are explained by reference to the Last Supper and the Crucifixion, but traces of similar myths have been discovered in pre-Christian documents. Another common superstition still not adequately explained is the one that it is dangerous to walk under a ladder.

But step by step these and other superstitions are being studied. Modern experts believe that in the end all of them will be explained.

Founded by Kind-Hearted Americans as a Home for Ex-Slaves, It Turns Out to Be One of the Few Remaining Countries on Earth Where Slavery Still Exists, and the President Quits His Job

A "Leopard Man" Cannibal From the Interior of Liberia.

LIBERIA, the only negro republic in Africa, was founded in 1821 as a haven for the freed slaves of America. After the Civil War liberated blacks were shipped to Liberia in cargo-load lots by kind-hearted Americans. Now their descendants form the upper class of Liberian society—the office-holders, professional and business men.

A few days ago, the astonishing news became public that Liberia, settled by liberated slaves, is one of the few countries in the world in which human slavery still exists. Former American slaves, returning to Africa, used the lessons they had learned from their American masters to enslave the weaker and simpler natives of Liberia's interior. It is charged that the upper classes not only keep slaves themselves but sell and ship them to surrounding districts.

Protests against slavery in Liberia, it is disclosed, have been made by the League of Nations. Liberia is a member of the League and its delegates at Geneva glibly answered the charges by pointing out that slavery still exists in Abyssinia and Arabia. The League of Nations couldn't do much about it, but the American State Department could and has.

Secretary of State Stimson sent a peremptory note to Liberia demanding the abolition of slavery. Charles C. D. King, President, and Albert W. Yancy, Vice-President, immediately resigned when this message was received by the Liberian Congress. Because of unpaid loans, the United States holds a virtual receivership over the black republic.

The new Liberian Government accepted "in principle" the recommendations of the League of Nations for the abolition of slavery, but delayed giving the United States adequate assurance that it will carry out the proposed reforms.

The fact that ex-slaves should to-day enforce slavery is not the only contradiction in that strange hodge-podge country. While there is no rent to pay by anybody, yet wages hang at the low figure of 25 cents a day, while the descendants of the former slaves who founded the republic are very deeply religious; yet, back in the interior, cannibalism still flourishes; while the civilized citizens of Liberia are orderly, the much-feared wild "leopard men" run loose in the bush, and while the more prosperous and better class of negroes on the coast wear frock coats and high silk hats, even through the blistering heat of the tropical day, as a symbol of caste, the unruly savages in the jungle run naked.

Nature itself seems to have taken an interest in this "pot of all nations," for here perhaps the most curious collection of insects, animals and birds to be found anywhere on earth. There are ants that march in platoon formations, with an advance guard of fighters to protect their super-workers; baboons that go foraging, and insects that enslave other insects.

There is a plant in Liberia that is guarded by ants, who defend it with their lives, and there is another plant that strangles the life out of animals and perhaps men. There is a mangrove that grows downward from the air until it takes root for a fresh start and will only drop its sharp-pointed seeds into the mud when the tide is low.

The driver ants are the most terrible pests of Liberia. They are of two forms—the workers, not conspicuously large, and the soldiers, whose heads and jaws are enormously enlarged. Both are ferocious in the extreme. Having once fastened themselves into the skin of an animal they never let go. If their bodies are pulled apart their heads remain as firmly attached as ever, and it is necessary to tear the mandibles out of the flesh.

The peril of an attack by driver ants is so great that animals roll themselves on the ground in their rage, thus gathering more ants. Animals of considerable size are killed by the drivers.

The ants are so fierce that great snakes are afraid of them. The python after killing an antelope makes a circuit of the whole vicinity before eating to see that no ants are near, and if he finds any he abandons his prey.

Grasshoppers fall so abundantly that the civilized natives use umbrellas to keep them off. There is another interesting little insect that crawls towards your bed at night and leaves a weird trail of phosphorus on the floor. Liberia has a large scorpion with red claws, a crab, and a very juicy spider that is much relished by the natives for food. Thousand-legged worms are common. Snails grow to six inches in length.

There is a chameleon whose appearance is so horrid and sinister that men shudder at its appearance.

While in London recently President King was received by King George at Buckingham Palace and treated with great distinction. He had already been received by the King of Italy, Premier Mussolini and many persons of high position in Europe.

In London he had lunch with Sir Austen and Lady Chamberlain, Lord and Lady Birkenhead, Lord and Lady Desborough and others. The cream of London society treated the colored President as a great potentate, and had themselves photographed in his company with evident pleasure. While in London the President made this statement:

"My country is exceedingly happy. There is no rent to pay, and there are few social troubles. The workmen are keen to work for 25 cents a day, and then to return to their farms every three months of the year to gather the rich fat crops of rice. This is an easy existence."

There is some reason to believe, however, that life in Liberia is not quite as simple as President King suggests and that it has many problems to solve.

Shortly before 1847 the colony got into difficulties with England, which would not allow a community to set up a recognized government to collect customs and perform other functions of government. The United States refused to annex the colony, and Liberia therefore declared its independence, which it has maintained ever since.

The United States did not recognize Liberia until 1862. American unfamiliarity with the country is illustrated by an episode that happened when a Congressman was asking for an appropriation to send refrigerators and other supplies useful in a tropical country to Liberia. Another Congressman rose and said that the honorable member evidently was referring to Siberia, and that Siberia was a very cold country, and that refrigerators were the very last thing they needed.

After the Civil War the United States informed European governments that it took a special interest in the welfare of Liberia. This has helped to prevent the country from being absorbed in the general partition of Africa by European powers which has occurred since that time.

There are 12,000 Liberians of American origin, 30,000 civilized inhabitants of local descent and about 2,000,000 wild people.

The House of Representatives numbers fifteen when in full session, the Senate eight. The President is elected every four years.

The capital, Monrovia, looks attractive with its many red roofed bungalows when viewed from the sea, but first impressions are upset when landing is attempted in the little boats that ride through the surf and frequently upset.

Railways are non-existent in Liberia, and the streets of the capital are covered with grass, which is kept short by the goats and other animals that browse there.

Many of the buildings are constructed of kerosene cans and corrugated iron, with more substantial buildings here and there.

The most attractive building in Monrovia is marked with the sign "Faulkner's Hotel and Ice Cream Parlor." With the temperature averaging 110 degrees in the shade, Mr. Faulkner, as proprietor of Monrovia's only ice cream plant, occupies a commanding position, which explains his repeated election by overwhelming majorities to the mayoralty.

Liberia produces rubber in considerable quantities and is capable of producing more. This is an article of which American industry is in great need and of which it cannot obtain a supply at reasonable prices.

Harvey Firestone, the great tire manufacturer, has bought 1,000,000 acres of land in Liberia for rubber culture and started a line of steamships to bring the product to the United States. This industry is expected to strengthen Liberia very greatly.

Liberia is really a thin ribbon of civilization on the coast with a vast background of black, though highly picturesque, savagery. The coast is 350 miles long and the back country is 48,000 square miles in extent.

It is certain that many of the worst forms of African savagery exist in the interior of Liberia. The terrifying cult of voodooism still lingers there. In the inaccessible hinterland flourish secret societies with the purpose of seizing defenseless natives and devouring them at cannibal feasts. And here are captured the slaves worked by the upper classes.

The most dreaded of the secret societies are the "leopard men." These fanatics, usually men of powerful physique, prowl through the jungle wearing leopard skins and armed with terrible iron hooks in place of claws. When they find an unprotected native they spring upon him and claw him to death.

Lady Dorothy Mills, the daring British woman explorer, is the best-known authority on the "leopard men" and secret societies of Liberia and other parts of West Africa. She has traveled among them and seen them.

In her writings Lady Dorothy Mills has said that, although all open cannibalism has been stamped out by the Liberian Government, the craving for human flesh dies hard, and is likely to break out in remote places out of reach of the government. A few weeks ago Lady Dorothy told in these pages of killing one of the dread "leopard men."

In recent days in Liberia there has been a great hunt for the secret society men. There are now numerous camps in the wild interior where numbers of "leopard men" are imprisoned for life. They are so savage that it is necessary to keep them chained together in a row while they are at their forced labor. Otherwise they would attack their guards.

A French explorer, M. Degouilles, furnishes a remarkable description of a recent encounter with a "leopard man." He saw a pretty young girl about to fill a jar at a spring and was going to make a snapshot of her.

Before he could move a huge figure sprang upon her out of a tree. At first he believed it was a leopard. He raised his gun and shot the creature through the heart.

When he ran up to the body he was astonished to find it was a man. The skin of a leopard was bound over the man's back, head and arms. On the hand and feet were long, curved and sharp talons, made of iron, and fastened to wrist and ankles.

The explorer turned to the girl and she, too, was dead. The iron talons had been thrust into her neck, severing the arteries.

The "leopard men" were reported recently to be roaming around in bands instead of singly. They are called together by one of the "leopard priests," who beats upon a drum. The ordinary natives believe that the "leopard men" are really possessed by the spirits of leopards.

The Liberian Republic is described by Prof. O. E. Cook, formerly of Liberia College, as an aristocratic despotism under republican forms. Social strata exist in Liberia as clearly defined as the castes of India. It is the native African who has to take the back seat. The Americanized negroes, whose ancestors came from America, make up the ruling class of Liberia.

All political power is confined to them and they constitute the fashionable society of the land. Their wives and daughters are the social ornaments of Krootown, which is Liberia's center of fashion. Their apparel excites the awe of the wild natives. Not infrequently they wear up-to-date costumes of Parisian origin which display in a striking manner their ebony skins.

Professor Cook remarks that the young Liberians of the ruling classes are a great sight to behold, as they stroll out of their club for an afternoon promenade. They are accustomed to be waited on from their earliest years by the benighted natives who perform every possible service for them.

The wild natives are not allowed by their rulers to wear a high hat, which is the chief external symbol of power and aristocracy. Occasionally the native gets hold of an old plug hat and dons it with pride mixed with terror. He dares only wear it in the presence of other wild natives. When a Liberian of American descent comes along the plug hat is hidden away.

The civilized Liberians give much of their time to religion. Every religion of America and Europe is represented in the civilized settlements, while in the interior Mohammedanism, devil worship and many strange cults flourish.

The Protestant Episcopal Church of the United States is represented by a bishop, and the church also conducts a college.

The American Lutherans have a large boys' school. The Methodists have more than a thousand students in their colleges and schools.

The Baptist was the earliest church, that of the original American settlers. They have had a church building there since 1821. Their principal strength is now in Monrovia and in the curious district called Basa.

The African Methodist Episcopal Church only began work in Liberia in 1885, and has made great progress, as it is said to understand the race better than the others.

There are Mohammedan mosques at Brewerville and at many places in the far interior Mandingo towns.

Despite all these churches, investigators have found that slavery flourishes and the United States has taken action to put an end to the practice which is so opposite to the spirit in which the black republic was founded.

Stripped of the Jewels Buried With Her in Her Grave

Four Times Was the Tomb and Coffin of Madame Brayda Broken Open in the Cemetery Near Paris, Recalling the Mysterious Desecration of the Grave of Mlle. Lantelme, the Famous French Beauty

Photograph of the Tomb of Madame Brayda in the Cemetery of Vaucresson, Near Paris, Which Was Opened Four Times. The Name "Brayda" Can Be Seen on the Stone Slab.

Reconstructing the Grave Robbery From the Evidence at the Scene, the French Police Concluded That Not Less Than Three Robbers Were Engaged in the Distressing but Profitable Enterprise. It Would Have Required the Strength of Two Men, the Detectives Concluded, to Pry Off the Stone Which Capped the Tomb, While a Third Confederate Probably Stood by With a Lantern.

Mlle. Lucie Lantelme, the Most Beautiful Woman in Paris, Who Died a Mysterious Death and Whose Grave Was Desecrated in a Most Extraordinary Manner Which the Paris Detective Bureau Has Never Been Able to Explain.

PARIS, Jan. 15.

MME. HONORINE BRAYDA had but two passions in life—her lover and her beautiful jewels. When she died two years ago, her last request to her admirer was that her jewelry be buried with her. This was done and it was believed that Mme. Brayda had truly found the peace of the grave.

But it was not to be. In the two intervening years her grave has four times been opened and her remains as many times disturbed. First, Madame's relatives became suspicious that M. Edmond Vallandier, the lover, had not been faithful to the woman's dying request and had not buried with her the fortune in jewels—100,000 dollars' worth. They obtained a court order and had the grave opened.

There were the rings on the shrivelled fingers, the necklaces about the shrunken neck and the pendants on the fallen chest. A gem expert examined them and declared them genuine.

M. Vallandier was exonerated of any duplicity in carrying out the last request of his mistress. The grave was closed again, the jewels still in their places on all that was mortal of the woman who had so loved them. But in Paris the newspapers had told the world of the fortune in gems buried in the little cemetery at Vaucresson, nearby.

So no one was very much surprised a week later when it was found that ghouls had broken into the grave of poor Mme. Brayda, disinterred the body and replaced it. There were pick signs around the grave that the coffin had been taken out, opened and looted.

Reconstructing the grave robbery from the evidence at the scene, the French police concluded that not less than three robbers were engaged in the distressing but profitable enterprise. It would have required the strength of two men, the detectives concluded, to pry off the stone which capped the tomb, while a third confederate probably stood by with a lantern. Nobody laughed that the jewels had been taken, but it was necessary to make sure. So for the third time the coffin and body of Mme. Brayda were lifted from the grave. When the coffin was opened it was seen that this time the jewelry was gone. Every bauble that she had prized had been stolen, except a few inexpensive religious charms that the superstitious thieves had been afraid to touch.

The police made a thorough investigation but could find no clues to the identity of the robbers. Mme. Brayda's body, this time stripped of its jewels, was again sealed in its coffin, the coffin returned to the grave and the grave closed. But not for long was she to remain in peace. A few days later someone noticed the names of two Paris jewelers scribbled on the tool shed of the gravedigger, M. Fardeau. In vain he protested his innocence. Perhaps his fingerprints would correspond with those on the violated coffin, his accusers told the police. The police decided to see.

So for the fourth time Mme. Brayda's repose was disturbed. The grave was again dug up and the woman's remains lifted out. No evidence against Gravedigger Fardeau was found, the police politely apologized to him and again the body was returned to its uneasy resting place.

But if her body is finally at peace, her spirit must have been distressed at an odd consequence of the grave robbery and its publicity. Mme. Vallandier, wife of Mme. Brayda's lover, learning of their former relations, promptly started suit for divorce, naming the woman who has so signally failed to find peace in the grave.

On his part, M. Vallandier has had little peace since his lady-love passed away. It was bad enough when her relatives accused him of failing to bury the jewelry with the body or at least of substituting fake gems and keeping the genuine. His innocence was proved by the first disinterment of the body. So great had been his relief that he had fallen in a faint beside the re-opened grave. Then had come the shocking robbery of the coffin and the two subsequent disturbances by the police of the last rest of the women he loved. And now he faces that suit for divorce.

Mme. Honorine Brayda had been somewhat of a woman of mystery. She had a large establishment in the Rue de l'Echiquier in Paris and a country home in the little village of Vaucresson, a suburb. She divided her time between the two places. Her neighbors of the Villa Edmond in the Rue de Garches, Vaucresson, believed her rather eccentric. It was known she had a large fortune, but she lived quietly with only two servants. She had few visitors, only M. Vallandier and infrequent women friends. Several times a week she herself drove her auto to her Paris home, often remaining two or three days.

In Vaucresson, Mme. Brayda was known as an angel of kindness. Her two servants worshiped her and she was a friend of all the poor. She was liberal in her charities. The little cemetery was her particular concern and she made it known she wished to be buried, when that unhappy time came, in the modest plot she had purchased. She had named her villa in the Rue de Garches in honor of her lover's first name, Edmond. But in Vaucresson she made no display of the jewelry which she had spent a lifetime in collecting and which she loved most of all in life—next to Vallandier.

In Paris it was different. At her Rue de l'Echiquier home gay parties were held. M. Vallandier was accepted by all in her smart circles as her sweetheart. She delighted to load her slender fingers with her rings, her beautiful wrists with her bracelets, her faultless neck with her strings of diamonds, pearls, sapphires and rubies.

So, when she died in Vaucresson unexpectedly in January, 1929, and the simple inhabitants one dreary morning saw the hearse go by on the way to the little cemetery, they had no idea that it carried the dead woman brilliantly made up, dressed in silk, lace and ermine and bedecked with a fortune in jewelry.

But the relatives of the dead woman began to think about that fortune in jewelry which M. Vallandier said had been buried in her coffin. The more they talked about it, the more they doubted whether he would have faithfully carried out this last request when he might so easily have pocketed the gems.

So the relatives finally asserted their belief that the jewels had not been interred with the remains, and they obtained an order from the court to open the grave. And thus began the fourfold disturbance of what should have been Madame Brayda's last rest, in peace with the jewels she had loved so much.

The extraordinary succession of events in the little cemetery near Paris startled the public and recalled the even more remarkable grave robbery a few years ago of the vault containing the remains of Mlle. Lucie Lantelme, who was known as the most beautiful woman in Paris.

The immense fortune in jewelry which had been buried with her was not disturbed, and when five years later, during the darkest days of the war, the grave was again violated, the thieves were disappointed, for her husband had taken the precaution of removing the tempting stones and precious metals.

The two desecrations of Mlle. Lantelme's grave still form one of the unsolved mysteries of Paris. For that matter, her strange death during a house-boat party on the River Rhine is itself a mystery never cleared up. Indeed, her short but eventful life was full of mysteries.

At the age of 23 Lucie Lantelme was the toast of Paris. As an actress, she was not in the first rank, but her dazzling beauty made her the most popular and most sought after woman on the stage. Then when, in 1911, she married Alfred Charles Edwards, multi-millionaire founder and owner of the Paris Matin, it would seem that her happiness had been made complete. She had everything—youth, extraordinary looks, unlimited wealth and an adoring husband. Edward's was no novice as a husband; he had been married three, some say four, times before. He showered Lucie with jewels, automobiles, superb costumes.

Because of his many marriages and his close friendship with so many lovely ladies of the stage, Paris affectionately called Lucie's husband "Bluebeard." Edwards. In a short time it became pretty generally known that the former Mlle. Lantelme was not happy. She had remarkably beautiful eyes and everyone spoke of their sad, wistful, haunting expression. She appeared to be continually weighed down by an unspeakable sorrow.

It was generally understood that she sought relief from her sorrows in opium. Her friendship for the villainous apache, "Blond Guillaume," was another indication of unhappy domestic conditions. She had known the notorious apache chief before her marriage and refused to give up the association afterward.

Among the possessions of the Edwards menage was an exceptionally large and luxurious houseboat, l'Aimee. Six months after the marriage, Edwards and his lovely bride went on a cruise up the Rhine with a large party of gay friends. After a night of wild revelry, everyone went to bed late in the morning. Lucie and her husband occupied separate suites.

Shortly before dawn a woman's piercing scream was heard. After much running around by Edwards and his guests, Lucie's door was broken open. Her rooms were empty. Two days later the body was recovered from the river. The tragedy was never satisfactorily explained.

Mlle. Lantelme's remains were taken to Paris and placed in Pere la Chaise cemetery. Her collection of jewelry, worth many hundreds of thousands of francs, was buried with her.

Within a few months of her death occurred the first amazing attempt on her burial vault. Her coffin was broken open and roughly tossed about. "The violated vault showed evidence of a frenzy of destruction," said one newspaper account. "Not only were coffins wrenched open, but the mortuary altar was smashed, the cross, statues and vessels shattered and flung into a disordered heap in one corner of the mausoleum. It seemed that a passion of sacrilege as well as a lust of plunder had inspired the miscreants."

Strangely enough, none of the jewels was stolen. There was evidence that the robbers had fought among themselves, and perhaps they were frightened off before one side won the spoils. To discourage further ghoulish outrages, M. Edwards removed the jewelry from the grave. This fact was widely known.

After Mlle. Lantelme's death, Edwards' engagement to two prominent and beautiful Parisian actresses in succession was reported. But he died and it was found that he had left his entire fortune to a third beautiful actress, Mlle. Gabrielle Colonna Romano, who had been Lucie Lantelme's best friend.

In 1916, with the Germans hammering at the very gates of Paris, Lantelme's grave in Pere la Chaise Cemetery was again broken open. The ghouls were supplied with rope ladders, pickaxes and other tools. This time the intruders broke open the coffin, took out the body and left it on the floor of the vault. The second desecration of the grave was decidedly more difficult to explain than the first, and neither has ever been cleared up.

Since then, the remains of Lucie Lantelme have rested in peace, as the devoted but harassed M. Vallandier now hopes the body of Honorine Brayda will be permitted to rest until the final resurrection.

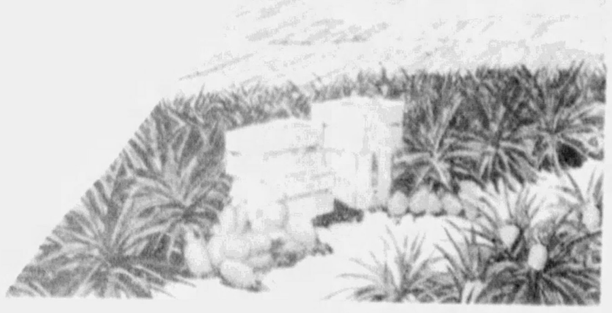
WORLD'S LARGEST GROWERS AND CANNERS OF HAWAIIAN PINEAPPLE

Note what a prominent part the pineapple plays in the appearance of this lovely salad? That's the reason, of course, that evenly cut, uniform DOLE 1 Sliced Pineapple is used.

WAIKIKI SALAD

Marinate separately in French Dressing 2 cups diced chicken and 1½ cups diced celery. Drain, toss lightly together and add ½ cup pecan meats. Fold in about ⅔ cup mayonnaise. Pile in lettuce nests and across the top of each salad stand two half slices of DOLE 1 Pineapple, separating slices with a thin fringe of parsley. Garnish each salad with a few celery curls bound around the middle with pimento, also pickled cucumber rings and cheese straws. Serves 6.



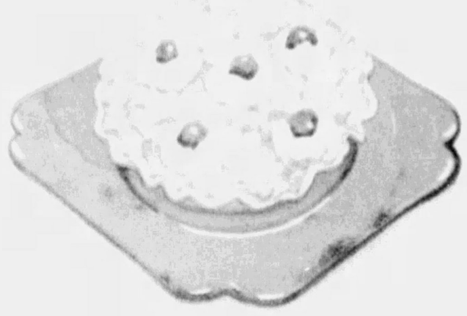
This is the way to buy your pineapple ··· by the grade best suited to your recipe!

DOLE 1 · DOLE 2 · DOLE 3

What a wonderful convenience to be able to buy just the grade of Canned Hawaiian Pineapple best suited to the dish you are preparing! What a marvelous help in planning menus to be able to choose the grade most economical—most satisfactory from every standpoint!

And James D. Dole has made this possible—as you'll realize once you've tried your hand at any of the inviting dishes pictured on this page. Dole takes the grades which Nature gives to pineapple and marks them so you'll know at a glance—at the time you do the buying—exactly which grade you are getting. He does this by stamping the name DOLE and beneath that name the number 1, or 2, or 3 right in the top of the can.

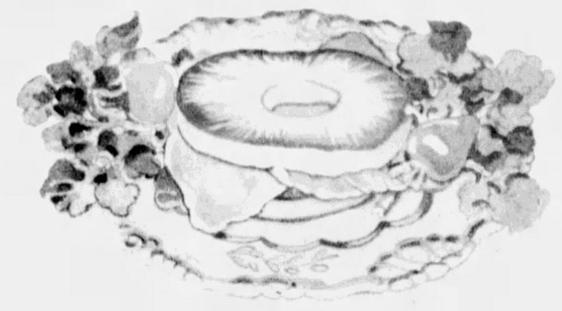
Fine Hawaiian Pineapple, sun ripened, picked at the point of perfection! That's what it is if DOLE 1, or DOLE 2, or DOLE 3 is stamped in the top of the can. So look for the DOLE grade-marks when next you buy Canned Hawaiian Pineapple. Use them when you try the four delicious pineapple dishes on this page.



For pineapple tarts of course you'll want the very finest crushed pineapple, with thick, rich syrup. And since DOLE 2 Crushed Pineapple is just that, it fits this recipe ideally.

PINEAPPLE TARTS

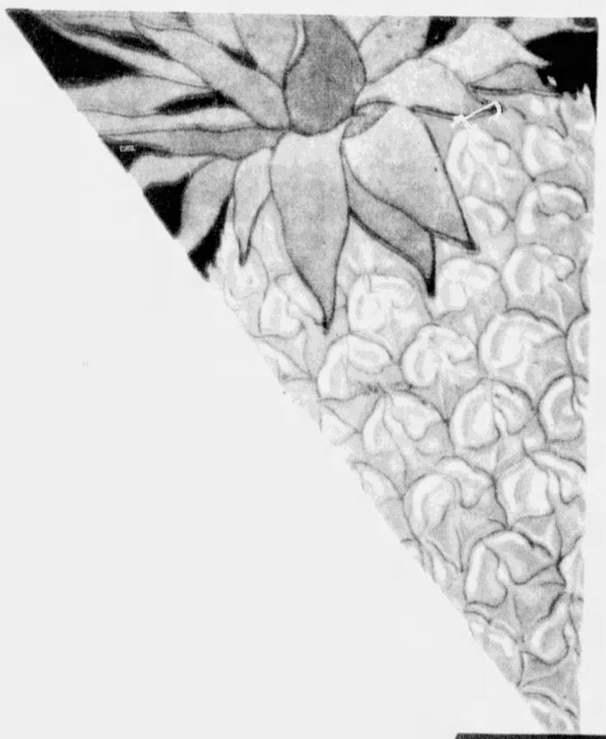
Drain the syrup from 2½ cups DOLE 2 Crushed Pineapple and to it add ⅔ cup sugar, 4 tablespoons flour and a few grains salt mixed together. Add lemon juice and cook until thick, stirring constantly. Cool, add crushed pineapple. Fill previously baked tart shells with this mixture and garnish the tops with whipped cream and tiny red skinless grapes or maraschino cherries. Makes 6 tarts.

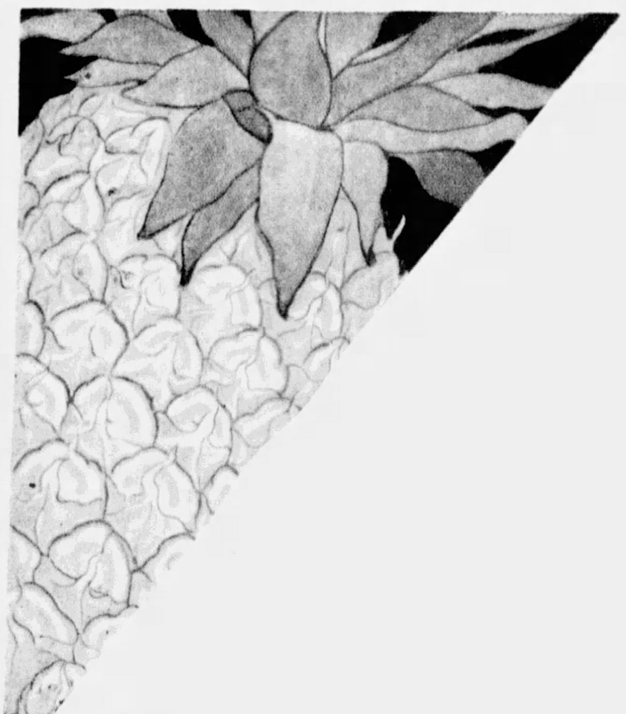


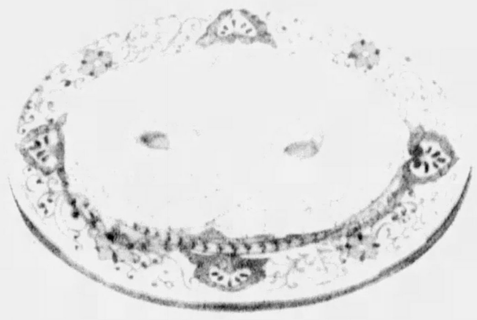
The economical way to make up this delicious dish is to use DOLE 2 Slices, since the pineapple is going to be cooked anyway. Perfectly shaped DOLE 1 Slices aren't really essential (although many women insist on using them).

PINEAPPLE LUNCHEON DISH

For each serving, sauté 2 slices DOLE 2 Pineapple in butter until a nice brown on both sides. Frizzle thin slices of boiled ham in butter and lay one or two slices between the pineapple slices on a luncheon plate. Garnish with sprigs of watercress and two or three radishes.







SLICED PINEAPPLE DESSERT

Here is a very simple dessert—easy to prepare, delightful to look at, delicious to eat! But of course, any dessert made of lovely DOLE 1 Slices, so evenly cut, so uniform in color, would have great beauty of appearance. And as for flavor, well, you don't have to tell a woman that DOLE 1 Sliced Pineapple is the pick of the pack—the finest Hawaiian Pineapple that skill can produce or money can buy. Just try serving it as dessert!

Surely you'll want to read the full meaning of the DOLE grade-marks well, here it is

Grade 1

Sliced—Slices which are the pick of the pack—uniform in size and color—in richest syrup of pure pineapple juice and cane sugar only. In appearance and flavor the finest pineapple skill can produce or money can buy.

Crushed—The same fine pineapple, in crushed form—in the same rich syrup.

Tidbits (Salad Cuts)—Grade 1 slices cut into small, uniform sections—packed in the same rich syrup.

Grade 2

Also in Sliced, Crushed and Tidbits. Slightly less perfect—less evenly cut, less uniform in color—Grade 2 pineapple is less expensive than Grade 1, though still a fine, delicious product. The syrup is less sweet than Grade 1.

Grade 3

Broken slices packed in the same syrup as used in Grade 2. Grade 3 costs the least because broken in form, but the fruit is of good, wholesome quality.

Where the Noble Romans Buried Their Pauper Relatives

A Startling Contrast in Ancient Roman Life. The Body of a Poor Christian Being Borne to a Community Burial Ground Passes a Patrician Reveler Returning With His Favorite Women and His Slaves From an All-night Orgy. Two Niches in a Newly Excavated "Columbarium," or "Dovecote," Where the Great Families Buried Their Poor Relations and Favorite Freedmen and Slaves.

ROME, Jan. 12.

THE largest ancient burial ground ever unearthed in Italy has just been uncovered on the "Sacred Island" in the delta of the Tiber. It lies between the very old city of Ostia and the later Port of Rome constructed by the Emperor Trajan more than 1800 years ago. Between 400 and 500 tombs have been found on both sides of the old road formerly connecting the two harbors.

The inscriptions, plaques and carving on the tombs show that they were those of the middle and lower class Roman citizens, freedmen and slaves. Many of the tombs, the inscriptions indicate, were erected by the great Roman families for their pauper relatives and the humble members of their households. Wealthy patrons here buried physicians, artisans and tradesmen for whom they had acted as patrons.

A great many "columbaria" have already been excavated. These were great tombs filled with tier after tier of niches, in which were interred the lesser members of a noble household. "Columbaria" meant "dovecotes," so called because of the resemblance. Great families erected these "dovecotes" to take care of their innumerable attendants and slaves.

Individual tombs were also built by noble patrons for their favorite and more intimate followers, such as personal servants, "poor relations" and "in-laws." These in the newly uncovered cemetery bear carvings indicating the rank and calling of the deceased, and usually chiseled inscriptions with the name of the departed and that of the master, patron or head of the household.

The architecture of the newly found tombs on the "Sacred Island" identifies them with the glorious days of Trajan and Hadrian. The period saw the highest development of ornamental architecture. Even on the poorest of the newly unearthed tombs the grandiose architecture of the period is imitated.

That these tombs were obviously built for tradesmen and workingmen is demonstrated by the numerous marble inscriptions preserved over the entrance ways. Almost all the tombs have kept intact their vaulting, the travertin lintels and jams, the stone coffins, the funeral urns and the original terra cotta decorations. Travertin is extensively used, as it was a stone quarried nearby and was in great demand in those times for building purposes. It was a light yellow rock which hardened on exposure to the weather.

The discovery of the interesting old graveyard was made possible through Premier Mussolini's extensive program of draining and reclaiming the marshes on the outskirts of Rome. This particular section had been turned over to the Italian National Ex-Combatants' League, which corresponds in a general way to the American Legion in this country. The Italian Legionaires were digging up the ground for vegetable patches. While preparing their plots for onions, lettuce and broccoli the war veterans ran across numerous specimens of ancient brick work, travertin cornices and other historic treasures.

With the Italian's reverence for his country's traditions, work on the garden was stopped and the Governmental Archeological Department called in. These experts soon established that a find of rare archeological importance had been made. Besides the tombs themselves, sculptures, statues, mosaics and other treasures were soon brought to light.

Although the sculptures are not of a value comparable to some other finds and neither jewels nor golden treasure has been found, the Italian archeologists are highly pleased with their discoveries of decorative mosiacs and carved marble as representative of scenes of everyday life eighteen centuries ago. The inscriptions and carvings depicting scenes from the lives of the deceased, humble members of that half-forgotten society, are declared to be of the highest archeological value.

One of the most interesting of the tombs so far revealed is that of a surgeon. It will be remembered that in the days of ancient Rome even the most skilled physicians and surgeons were likely to be slaves or freedmen who had been slaves. The profession of medicine had not attained the dignity it now has.

This particular surgeon's tomb bears on either side of the entrance a plaque illustrating difficult operations performed in the life of the deceased. One plaque shows a very frank obstetrical operation, the other the surgeon operating on the right leg of a woman. The woman is seated in a chair, a nurse supporting her from the rear while the physician kneels before her. Both scenes are carved in marble in high relief.

Social customs of Rome in the dawn of Christianity are revealed by the double tomb of the noble Claudius Eutichus and Memnonidus, whom Claudius freed. Memnonidus evidently had once been a galley slave, as next to the entrance to his grave is carved a miniature galley, with helmsman and three oarmen. Still another interesting tomb is that of a miller, with terra cotta plaques illustrating his work, one of them an oven with loaves of bread piled inside.

Even tombs of the very poorest people were included in this historic cemetery. Some could only afford rude mounds of stone, without any carvings or decorations outside of the name. The extremely poor were tucked away in mere holes, tier upon tier, something like the cells in a beehive. Funeral urns abound in this necropolis, as cremation was extensively practised by the old Romans, and the ashes of the departed were buried in the common cemeteries with the same ceremonies as accorded the unburned bodies.

But however poor and meagre the interiors of the tombs, the exteriors invariably copied the splendid architecture and ornamentation of the finest monuments of the golden epoch of Trajan and Hadrian.

In addition to the tombs themselves, a number of other interesting objects have been found in their midst and the Italian archeologists are confident that more rare finds will be made. Some of these art treasures undoubtedly came from the Port of Rome built by Trajan. The most important so far turned up by the spades of the archeologists are two statues of the Hellenistic school, one representing a satyr extracting a thorn from the foot of another satyr, the other depicting a child on horseback with a slave leading the horse. Two smaller statues apparently represent Spring and Autumn.

When the importance of this historical discovery became apparent, the Italian Government stopped the work of the Legionaires in planting gardens. A number of farm houses had already been erected on the site of the old cemetery before it became known that archeological treasures lay underneath. But a large area is still open to exploration and excavation. If the Government scientists decide it is necessary to tear down these newly erected structures in order to bring to light more of ancient Rome's glory, this undoubtedly will be done. Premier Mussolini has stated that he will spare no effort to uncover every possible vestige of Italy's splendid past.

Already the discoveries made on the "Sacred Island" have focussed attention on the burial customs of the old empire in the early days of Christianity. Of course, the methods of interring the dead changed with time.

Burial was not permitted within the city walls and the cemeteries were generally located along the principal highways leading from the city. Thus the burial places were an almost continuous chain of monuments, built in all manner of shapes and sizes, such as great altars, small shrines, pyramids, round towers and ordinary tombs. The exteriors of these structures were adorned with commemorative or symbolic carvings, and the interiors, which may have been wholly above the surface or partly sunk beneath, were chambers surrounded by niches in which were placed the bodies or the funeral urns containing the ashes of the departed.

Often the monument chamber stood somewhat back from the road, leaving space for a large semicircular seat of stone open to the public to use, its back wall being inscribed with some statement of honor to the family owning the monument. Around the sepulchre was a space of ground planted with shrubs and trees, surrounded by a low wall.

If the body was to be cremated, somewhere near on an open level the funeral pyre was built, generally of pine logs, with the interstices stuffed with pitch, brushwood or other inflammable material. The pyre took the shape of an altar, and cypress branches, the Roman symbol of death and mourning, stood against the side.

On the summit of this pile was laid the body of the deceased. Incense and unguents were shed over it. Wreaths and other offerings, often of no little value, were cast upon the heap. While loud cries of lamentation were being raised by the company present, a near kinsman approached the pyre with a torch and, turning his face away, set fire to the whole structure. It rapidly burned down, the last embers being quenched with wine as the whole company present thrice cried "Farewell!"

Except for the nearest relatives, the mourners then returned to the city. The relatives who stayed took off their shoes, washed their hands and proceeded to gather up the bones, which they cleaned in wine and milk, and the ashes, which they mixed with perfume. These remains were then placed in an urn of bronze, marble, alabaster or perhaps of colored glass, and the urn reverently put away in one of the niches in the chamber of the monument.

Of course, the lower the condition of the deceased, the less elaborate were the funeral ceremonies. The scene at the cemetery, in the case of high born and wealthy corpses, was the culmination of three to eight days of mourning and ceremonies in the city. In the case of the very poor, the rites at the grave were scant enough, sometimes consisting of little more than tossing away the body or ashes anonymously as a nameless derelict is today is planted in the potter's field.

Simple ceremonies, however, were held over the bodies of the poor who had friends and relatives. These people could not afford to use unguents and keep their dead in state for many days. They could not afford real cypress trees, but used cheaper substitutes if anything at all. They could not afford all the processionists and paraphernalia of the undertaker, but must be satisfied with four commonplace bearers, who hurried away the corpse in the evening or early morning, not on a couch but in a cheap box, and carried it out to the designated necropolis. Seldom could they afford the fuel to burn the body, and in many cases it was simply thrown into a pit roughly dug and there left without monument.

To secure more respect and decency in the handling of their dead, there were many burial clubs, whether connected with the trade guilds or not, and these procured a joint tomb of the kind known as a "dovecote" or columbarium.

These co-operative sepulchres were underground vaults. Many of them are among the monuments just excavated along the old Ostia road on the "Sacred Island."

For this reason the Italian archeologists hail the discovery. They want to know more about the clever physician, the humble miller, the freed galley slave and their fellow sleepers on the "Sacred Island."

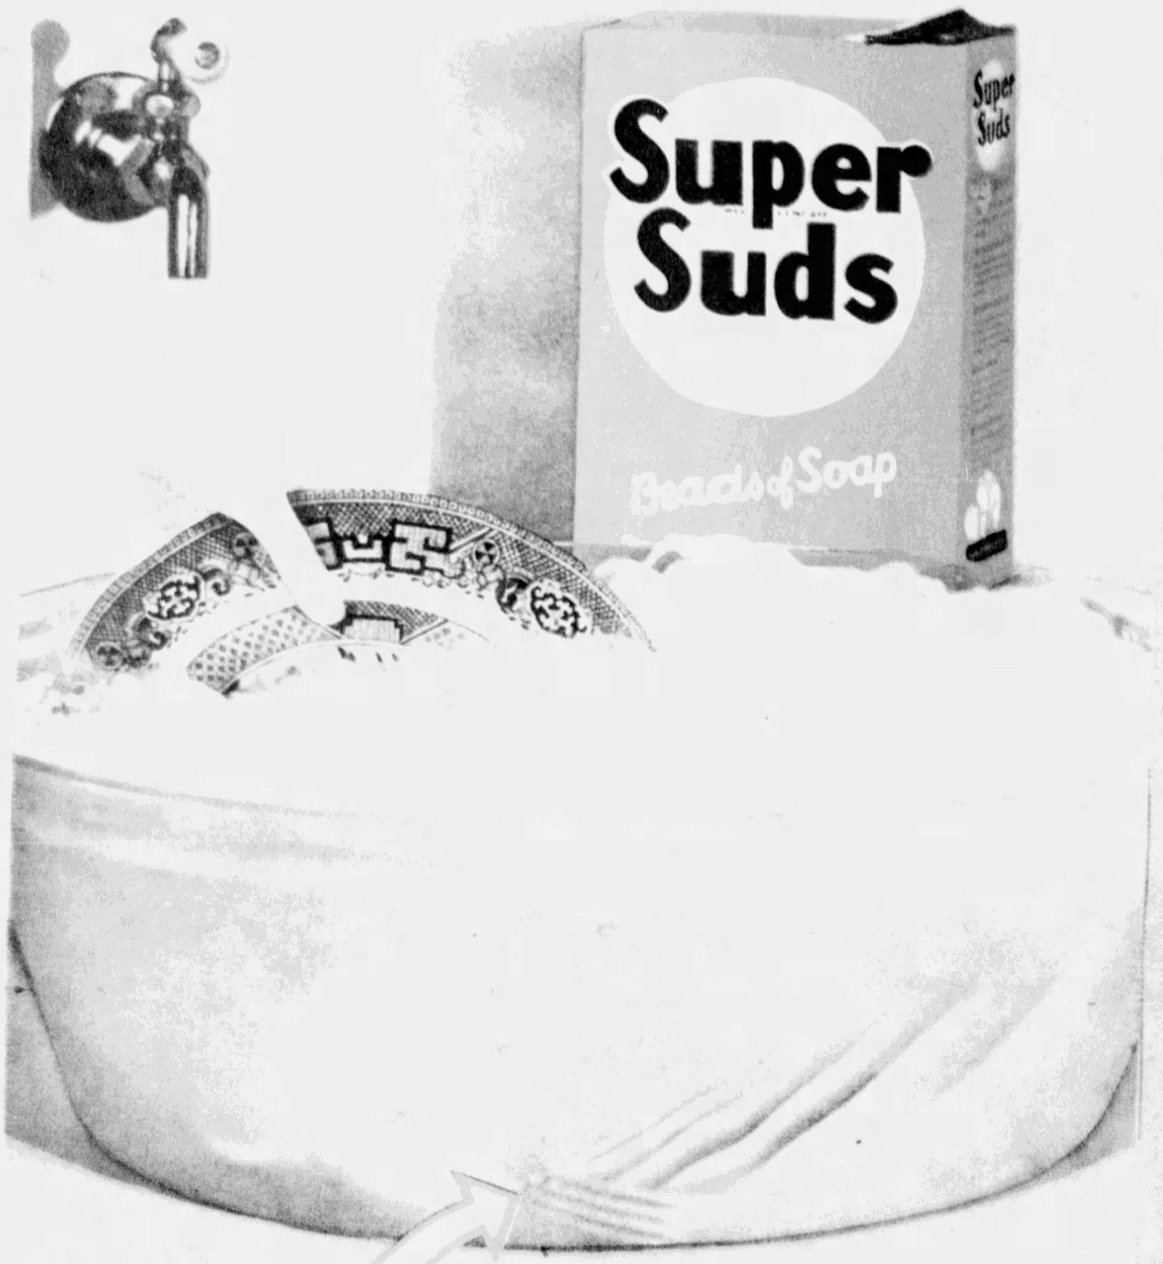
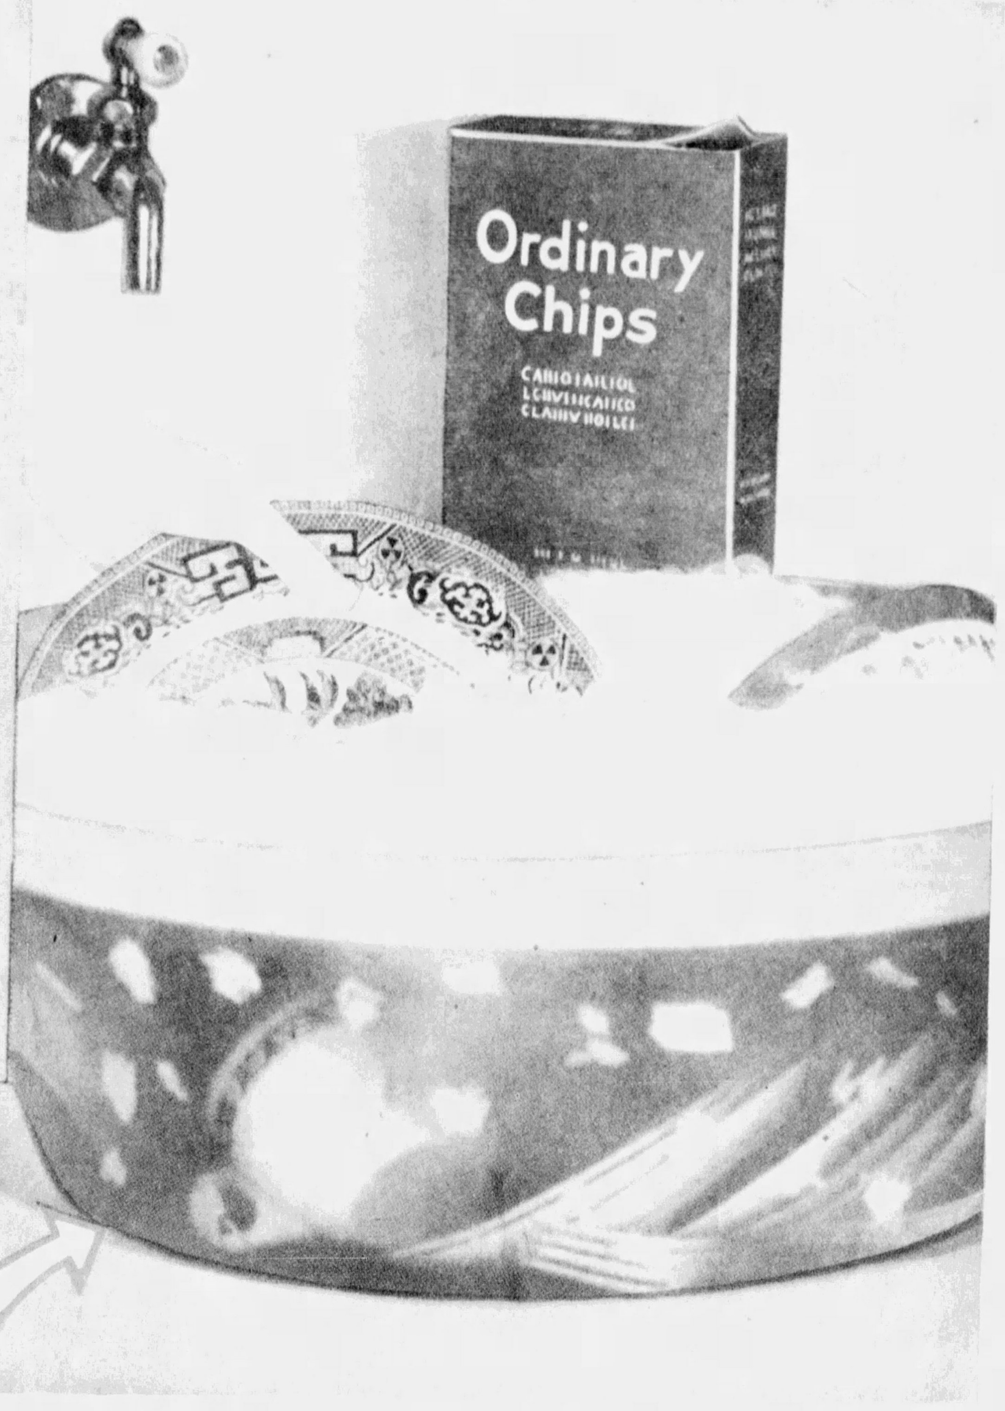
Like magic...the camera tells difference between Super Suds and Chips

*Photographs taken through glass dishpans prove that chips stay gummy, half dissolved, while Super Suds floods the dishpan with instant, lasting suds.





Fast-Dissolving Lasting Super Suds

Bead soap in action. Note in this actual color photograph the rich creamy soapiness throughout every drop of water. No particles of undissolved soap floating about. That shows why Super Suds cuts dishwashing time in half.

Slow-Dissolving Ordinary Chips

Slow-dissolving chips. This photograph, through a glass dishpan, using old-fashioned slow-dissolving soap, tells a different story! Look at the undissolved chips—the almost soapless water. Here's your explanation of slow, greasy dishwashings.

HERE is a startling revelation of the difference between dishwashing soaps. The first photographs ever taken that reveal exactly how soaps act below the surface of the water... down where the real job of dishwashing is done.

Just one glance and you see instantly why slow-dissolving chips and flakes make dishwashing greasy and drudgy. Why Super Suds—the instant-dissolving "bead" soap—speeds up dishwashing—makes it easier, dandier, faster!

Tests prove superiority of Super Suds

In the dishpan photographed at the right, a well-known chip soap was used. In the dishpan at the left—Super Suds. Water of the same temperature was added to both. Then the photographs were taken. Simultaneously. Under identical conditions. But just notice the amazing difference!

In the chip soap pan, the camera reveals, the water underneath the suds is clogged with gummy flakes of soap. Able to give only half-hearted help, because only half dissolved. No wonder dishwater gets greasy. No wonder jelled particles of soap are forever sticking to dishes.

Now look at the Super Suds pan. Notice how, in the same length of time, every tiny Super Suds bead has dissolved completely. Flooding every drop of water in the pan with rich, lasting soapiness.

Make this test

Make this test in glasses, to prove for yourself what goes on in your dishpan. Put a teaspoonful of Super Suds in a glass. A teaspoonful of any chips or flake in another. Now fill both glasses half full with water. Instantly, you get the same result shown in the dishpan pictures above. It's this instant, all-through-the-water soapiness that makes Super Suds so much faster!

This is exactly the way these soaps act in your dishpan. Slow-dissolving chips and flakes delay dishwashing. Allow dishwater to get greasy. Instant-dissolving Super Suds speeds up dishwashing. Saves your time in these 3 ways. 1. Saves waiting for suds. 2. Prevents greasy dishwater. 3. Rinses away so perfectly that dishes drain dry without wiping.

Not chips, flakes nor powder

No other soap can help you like Super Suds, because Super Suds is the first instant-dissolving dishwashing soap ever made. It's not chips, flakes nor powder. It's tiny hollow beads with walls 4 times thinner than the thinnest chip or flake. Therefore 4 times faster. Just try this modern speed soap. See how much time it saves you! Your grocer has Super Suds.

*The soapy suds were made under identical conditions—1/2 oz. of Super Suds was placed in one glass dishpan, in the other—1/2 oz. of chip soap. Equal amounts of water of the same temperature were then added to each pan. The time, from the moment the water touched the soap to the moment the photographs were taken, was the same in both cases, down to the very second.

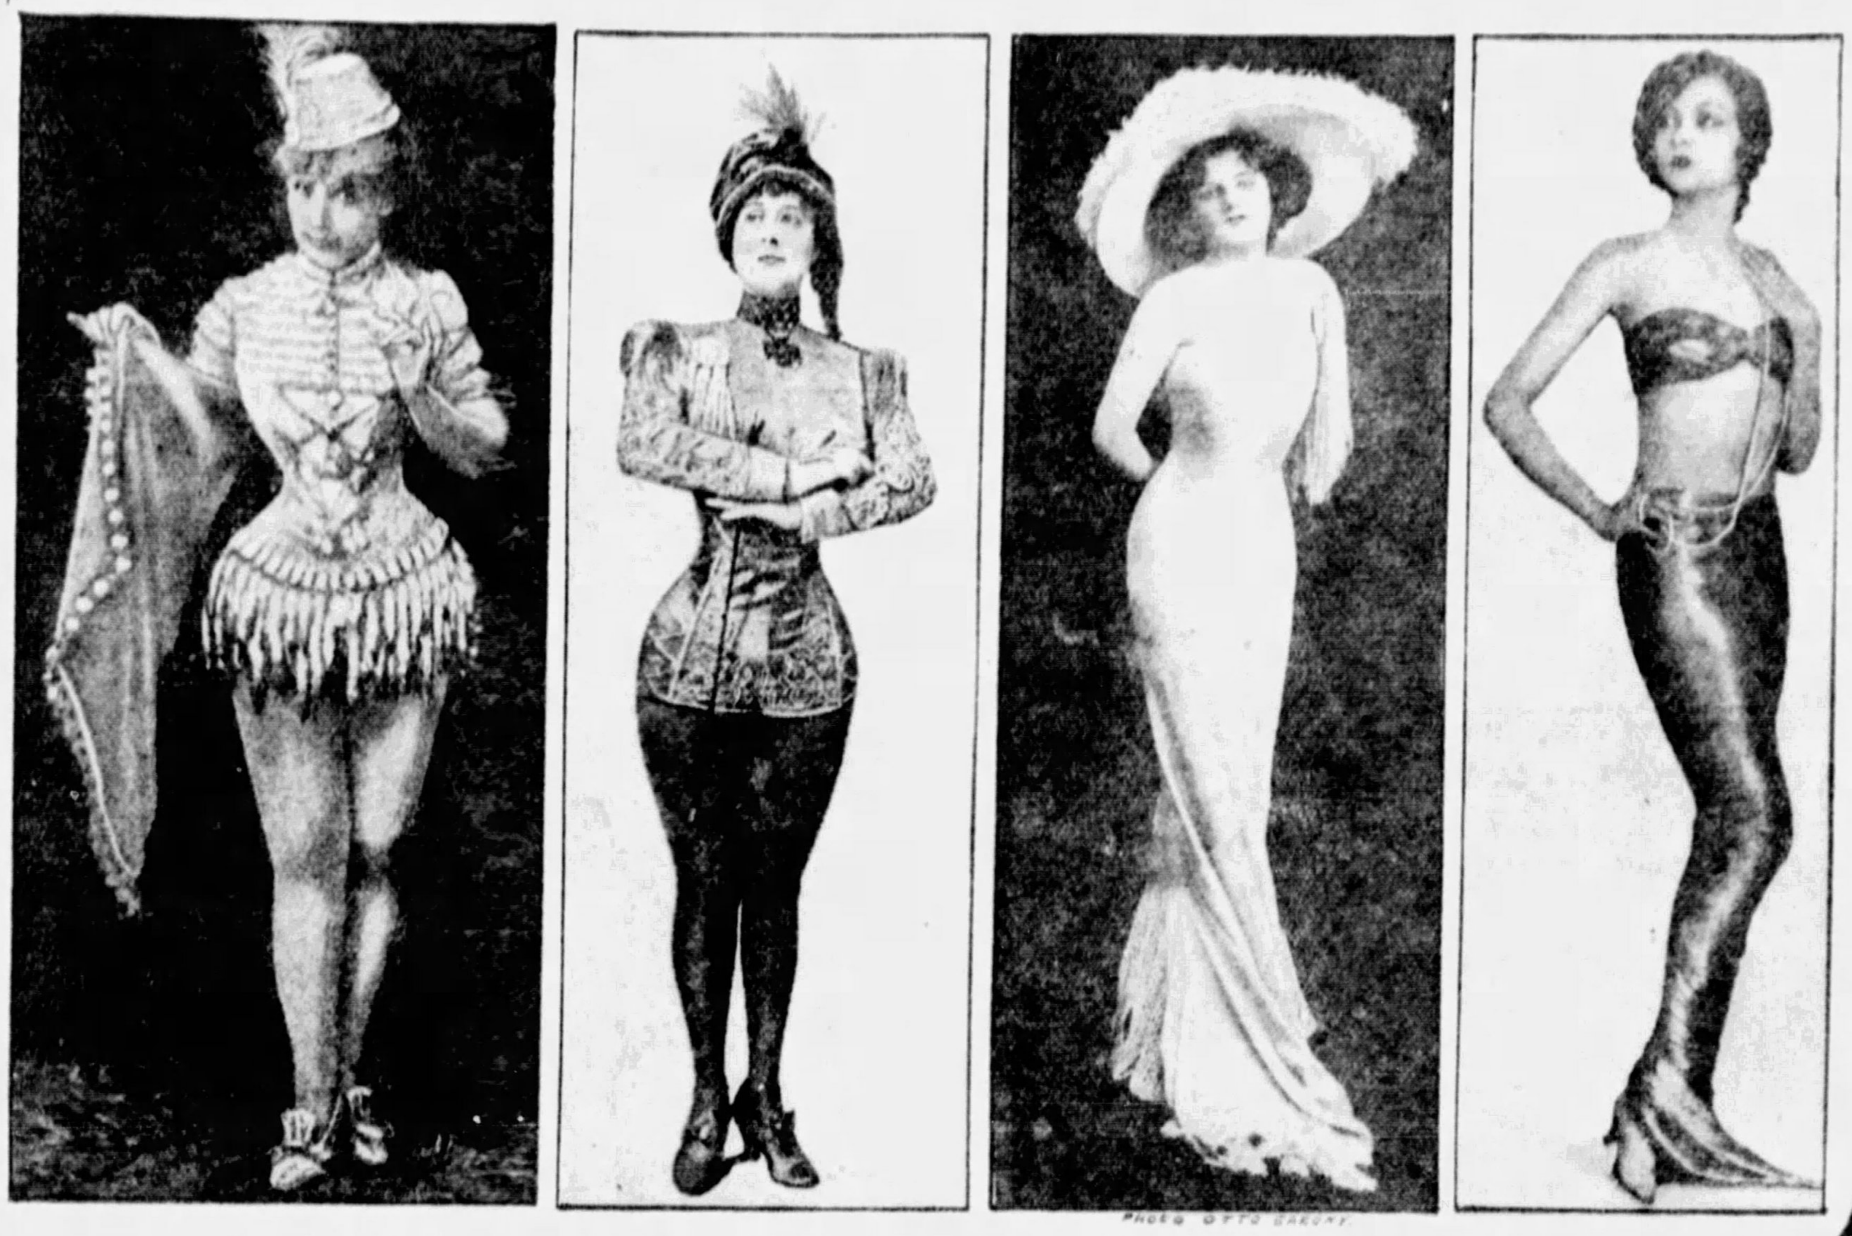
Her Famous Figure Old Fashioned—Nobody Wants Her

How the Style of No-Bust-No-Hips Reduced to Poverty Frankie Bailey, New York's Most Highly Paid Chorus Girl With the "Million Dollar Legs"



Four Steps in the Evolution of the Fashionable Feminine Figure in the Last Forty Years.
Fay Templeton, Whose Generous Proportions Were Greatly Admired When Hips and Busts Were in Fashion. Frankie Bailey, a Less Exaggerated and Better Balanced Figure, Which Was Regarded as "Perfect." Then, After the Plump "Merry Widow" Girls, the Popular Style Showed Nature's Curves Modified. Then Came the Hipless, Flat-Chested Figure Which Is Now Passing Out.

The Fashion of Fifteen Years Ago of Naked Arm and Shoulder and Exposed Back.

ANY ambitious woman with the money and necessary time can keep up with the changing fashions of clothes. But when the style penetrates deeper and requires radical change of the form and figure which nature provided—it is not always possible to satisfactorily change with the changing mode. And so it is that Frankie Bailey, who once drew a salary of $500 a week, the most highly paid chorus girl in New York, is reduced to penury.

At the height of her fame, years ago, she was known as the girl "with the million-dollar legs." In those days people paid an extra price for a front row seat to see a well developed bust and broad hips. Frankie Bailey's fame and high salary were earned because it was recognized that in nature's generous upholstery she seemed to have precisely the perfect balance of bust, hips, legs and feet.

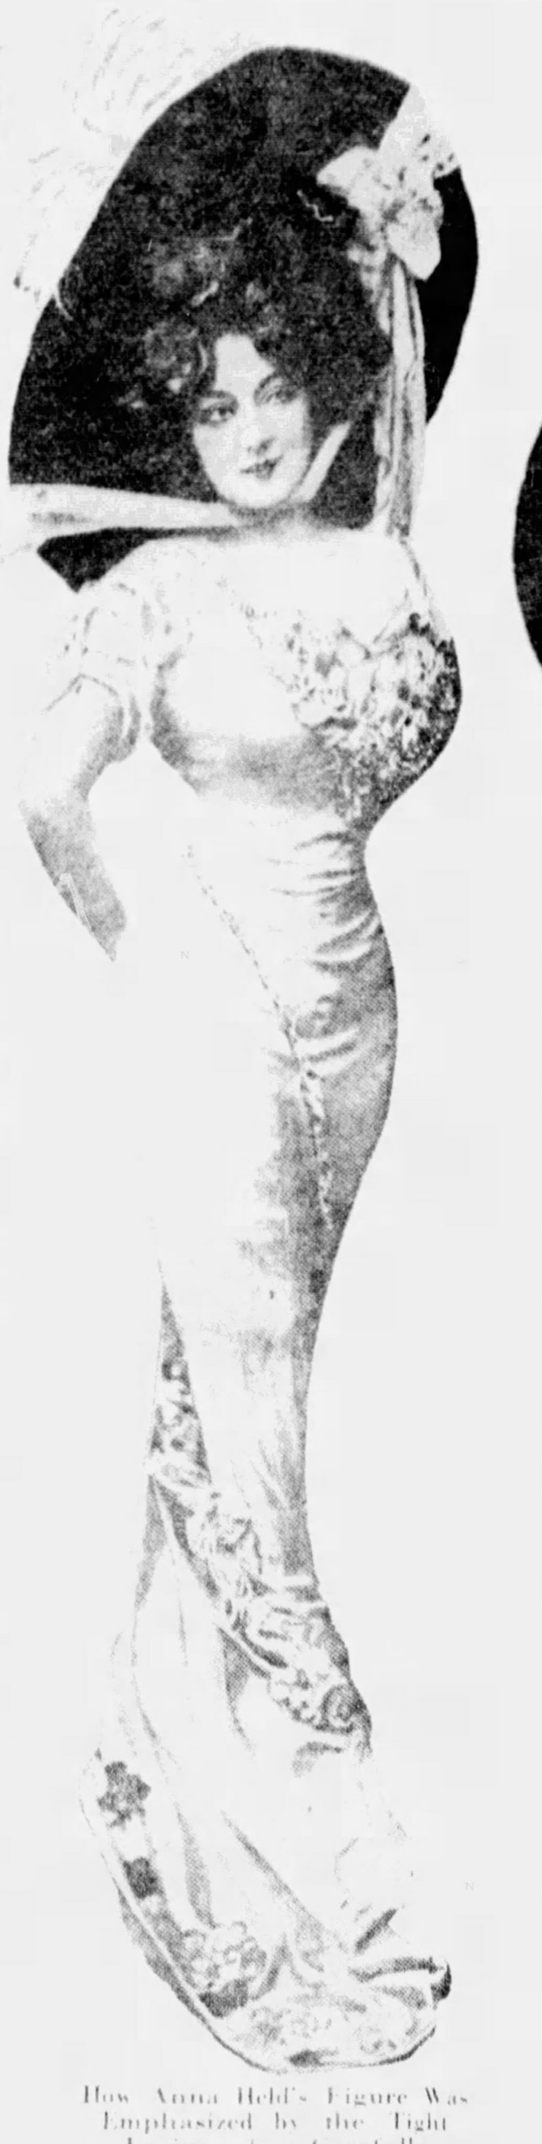
Frankie Bailey had no difficulty in keeping up with the changing styles of dress. She held her supremacy through the various changes until the fashion demanded something much more difficult than a change of dressmaking—a change of the human form underneath the clothes. The change was such a revolution and so unthinkable that it had happened before the astonished victim, the girl with the perfect figure, could make herself realize that her million dollar legs were "junk."

She had seen strange types of chorus girls, known as "ponies," "broilers," "chickens," "squabs" and "wrens," appearing on the stage, but not until these settled down into the bobbed-haired, boyish form and she heard her own type referred to scornfully as "old horses" could she understand that the "eternal feminine" had been physically made over, like an old-fashioned dress.

When Frankie Bailey went on the stage a perfect female figure was as definite a thing as a silver dollar, and it had not changed much for thousands of years. A girl on a Kansas farm did not have to exhibit herself to a beauty expert to know if she would do in a Broadway chorus. It was only necessary to go over herself in several important places with a tape measure and compare her dimensions with those of the Venus de Milo, frequently pictured in those days more than 30 years ago. If she was close to the Venus measurements, there was a job waiting for her provided, of course, that she had a reasonably good-looking face. The dancing and singing could be taught.

Frankie happened to have just the build that everyone agreed was the perfect womanly woman type, and up to that time nobody had dreamed that man would ever pay to look at any other type. She was lucky, too, in possessing an attractive face, winning smile and a personality that always got over the footlights. It did not take long for a lady so blessed to rise until she became a fixed feature of all the Weber and Fields shows at $500 a week, equivalent to $1,000 today, and was known throughout the country as the woman with the most beautiful legs in the world.

All this was an honest gift of Nature coming to Frankie without effort. She never dieted, took exercise or did anything else to make or preserve that figure except to buy her own tights and spend half an hour getting into them properly. It was a durable figure, too, and though her face has aged, she still retains most of that figure today at the age of seventy-one. It is not worn out, it is just obsolete, for she had the misfortune to outlive the ancient Venus ideal and see it junked. But Miss Bailey says it is already well started on its way back from the junk pile, and in not more than two generations, the well-upholstered, rounded, womanly type of woman will be back in her old place of favor.



How Anna Held's Figure Was Emphasized by the Tight Lacing of a Carefully Constructed Corset.

Looking back on this revolution which dethroned her, Miss Bailey believes it was caused by the revolution in dress which, in turn, was a symptom of woman's emancipation. Woman decided to come out of her shell altogether, not only from the home but out of her clothes too. As the stripping process slowly progressed something became painfully apparent to the strippers. In the case of the womanly type of woman with distinctive curves, wide hips and large bust, it could not be carried very far without shocking the public sense of decency. However, young girls could appear in the skimpiest bathing suits, even trunks, such as their brothers wore, without offending the eye. The reason was that they looked like their little brothers and like the sexless school mannekins used in physiology courses.

It all simmered down to this principle—a nude woman is vulgar but a nude child is cute. With that limitation before them, the directors of stage spectacles soon worked out the theory that the more a woman resembled an undeveloped child, the further she could be stripped without giving offense. The ultimate result was the almost naked, boyish-formed "Follies" girl on the stage, the one-piece bathing suit on the beach, the knee skirt and stockingless legs on the street and the backless evening gown. From all of this Miss Bailey points out that the pendulum of fashion is now swinging away. Even the bathing suit, though as revealing as ever, is now being discretely covered with beach pajamas.

When Frankie Bailey was a little girl she remembers that decollette had become not only daring but alarming, cut so low in front that the well-fed ladies of the time, with their ample busts, looked as if a sneeze or even a deep breath might cause them to overflow the tops of their gowns. The dress could go no lower in front without being vulgar, but venturesome costumers found that it could be cut away under each arm or both and was more effective with one shoulder low and the other high. The unclad arm was one of the early intermediate steps in woman's almost complete emergence from the ancient chrysalis of her clothes, but when she first discarded sleeves, she covered her arms for a while with long kid gloves, which her men folk admitted were reasonably modest but unreasonably expensive.

The Thin, Almost Emaciated Arm of a Show Girl, When the Vogue of the Under-Nourished Figure Was at Its Height.

Having worked around the shoulders, the designers reached the back and, for the first time, seemed to realize that here were almost unlimited possibilities of exposure. Before long, evening dresses came to be built like a tugboat, having the necessary minimum height in front and then dropping to almost nothing at all in the rear.

Before Frankie Bailey's day there was a period of extremely exaggerated hips and busts, with wasp-like waists. The style, almost a caricature of the female form divine, was well represented by the once greatly admired Fay Templeton, and its equivalent in clothes was the grotesque bustle, without which Frankie's mother, or any other self-respecting woman of the era, would not have permitted herself to even come to the front door. In the forever famous Floradora sextette the girls were tall but "willowy," pounds lighter in thighs and hips, and with not very conspicuous busts. That was the Edna Goodrich type, but was the rage only for a few seasons.

Stage directors, groping around to apply that dictum that childlike figures could do no wrong on the stage, decided that England had made the big discovery. London producers had invented "pony ballets," consisting of tiny little women, with a "baby stare." "Ponies" were imported in hordes, making a great hit for a quite a while, romping over the stages of Europe and America, shaking their manes and prancing off with a last, fascinating, backward kick and alluring roll of head and eyes.

Another Example of the First Step in the Present Fashion of Exploiting Arms, Shoulder and the Back.

Again the public grew tired, and the managers tried to analyze the situation. The ponies were children in size, face and expression, but not in figure, which, though small, was rather mature. They tried tall, thin girls, not very different from the recent "Follies" products, but this was ahead of its time, too sudden a change, and not appreciated.

"Big horses back again, only they have starved them this time," muttered the public and its grumblings were heard and heeded. There was a frantic search for something else and the tall, thin ones were advised to return to the kitchen, farm, restaurant, department store or wherever they came from. Then began the reign of the "squab," which still survives in the by no means fossil form of Ann Pennington.

Small, dainty, short little creatures were the squabs, much smaller than the horses, but less feminine in build than the ponies and no baby stare. With the squab appeared the "broiler." There was very little outward difference between the two, but the squab, like its surviving example, Miss Pennington, could dance or sing or do some specialty really well while the broiler mostly strutted and posed. This made a difference in salary and a big difference in backstage social standing. Anna Held, who was small herself, though built on quite feminine lines, surrounded herself with squabs and did her best to prolong their vogue.

About that time, though short skirts and half-pound bathing suits had not yet appeared, the rising feminine generation was showing its mutinous disposition by putting its elbows on the table, crossing its legs, refusing to sit up straight and walking with the "ingenue slouch" to its mothers' disgust. "Chickens," a stage term that spread to the general public at that time, covered most any shape and size of woman and meant only that she was very young.

The last of the stage poultry, growing ever slimmer, was the "wren." According to Miss Bailey, the "wren" displaced nobody in particular but was a welcome novelty. A wren was of medium height and her coloring did not matter. She was a sort of Irene Castle; above all things she must be smart. Billie Allen and Vera Maxwell were notable wrens.

It was Mrs. Castle, with her bobbed hair and shapeless shape, as thin as a bean pole, who, by her clothes-smartness, introduced the boyish form perhaps more than any other person did. She was much thinner than the "starved horses" who had been rejected, but the public was now ready, so the "Follies" glorified bones and the girls starved down to them, if they could.

With this frankly unfeminine boyish figure held up on the stage as the ideal, the dressmakers made the style imperative for all women. They could not very well help it because revealing, almost naked styles, were the rage and it had been proved that only the uncurved form can go nearly unclothed and get away with it. There was nothing for the average woman to do but diet herself into the required lines or be unstylish. Of course, many women could not manage it. Some, like Frankie Bailey, did not try and others dieted themselves into early but fashionable graves.

Youth, normally thin by Nature, had an easy time of the new fad and presently, as an automobile passed by full of youths or a group strolled along the beach, it was almost impossible to say which were males and which females. This aggravated the situation to older women to whom the [illegible] figure meant drugs or unhealthful fasting. As all the youngsters, from the convent maiden to the bad and glad-of-it flapper, were [illegible] as their flaming youth [illegible], to have curves was not only unstylish but, worse, a confession of age.

But woman did not want to starve herself just to starve, and if it is a choice between eating all she wants and going half naked, the [illegible] are sure to win out, [illegible] Miss Bailey, who sees signs that they are already winning. Skirts are even now well down toward ankles for evening wear and according to the good old fashion principle that roots and tops should go together, long hair is being grown again.

"In another fifteen or twenty years," prophesies Miss Bailey, "woman will be her normal, plump self, which means that she will also be clothed and in her right mind."

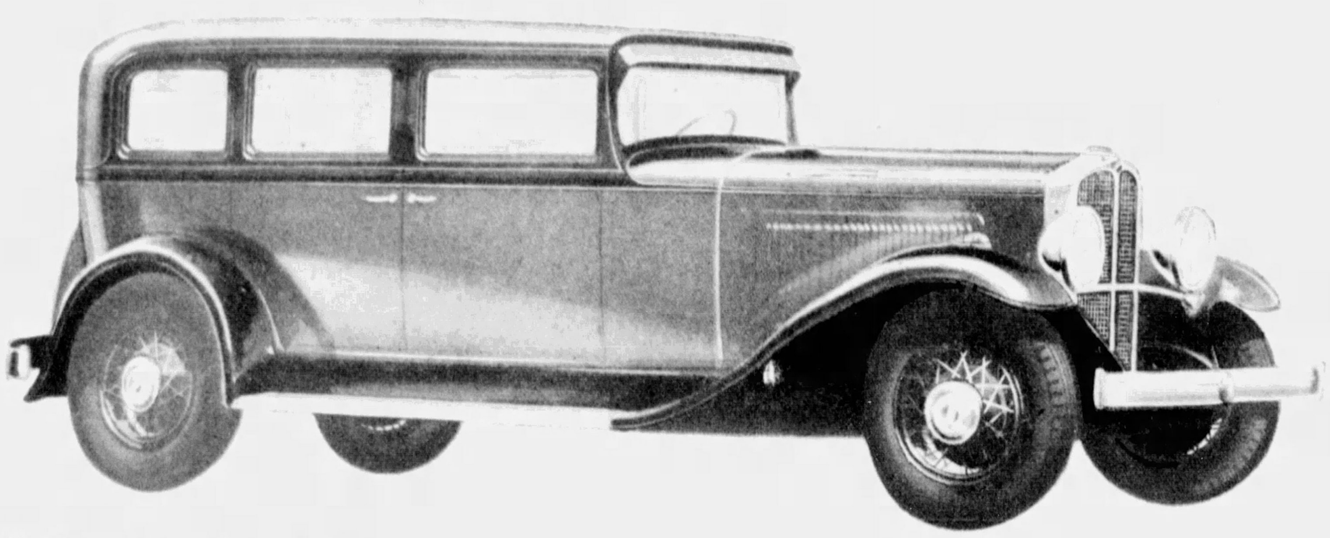
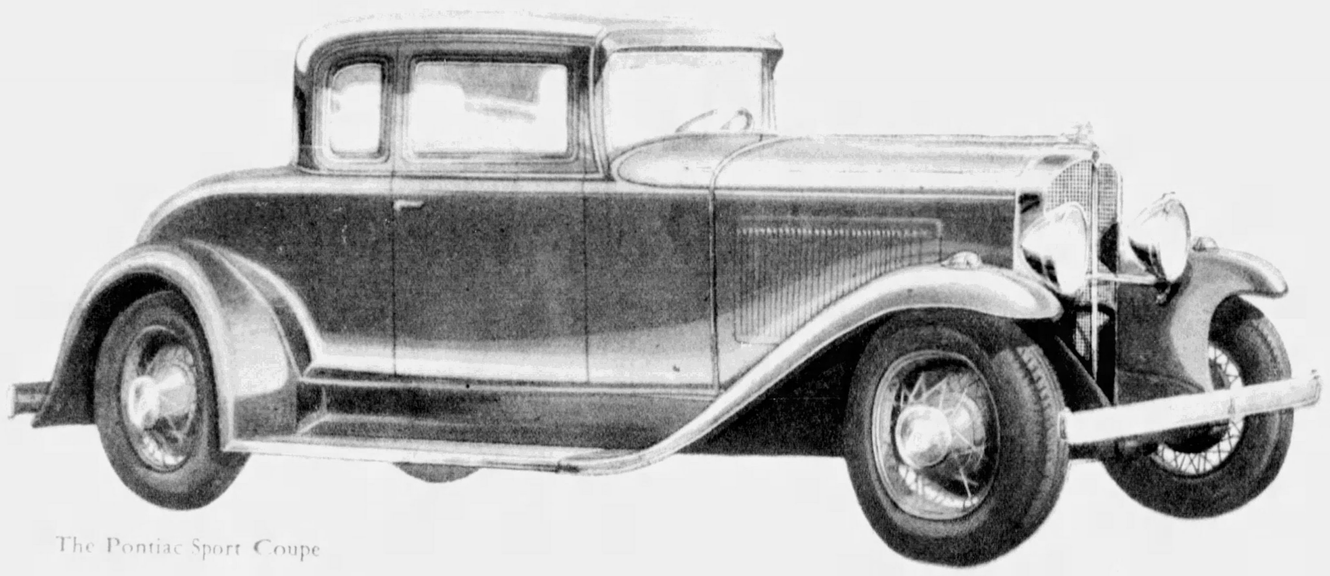
isher craftsmanship brings beauty . . style and comfort to Oakland - Pontiac . . . TWO FINE CARS



The Oakland Eight Custom Sedan



The Pontiac Sport Coupe

New bodies by Fisher of outstanding comfort, roominess, style and enduring value are available on the two new fine cars which Oakland-Pontiac offers 1931 motor car buyers.

Exterior lines are pleasing, distinguished and in the latest mode, with rich and tasteful color harmonies. Interiors are finished in high quality fabrics of mohair and whip cord. They are spacious, with wide roomy seats inclined at restful angles, and fitted with easy cushions that assure luxurious riding comfort. In every detail of appointment they provide a uniformly high standard of quality.

Fisher's composite wood and steel construction makes the bodies safe, quiet and durable. In opening and closing doors you sense the solidity and staunch construction which Fisher craftsmanship provides.

Because of General Motors' resources and purchasing economies, Oakland presents these two fine cars at new low prices.

Front pillar and one-piece VV windshield—You find [illegible] one-piece [illegible] weakness or leaks—The [illegible] safer by eliminating [illegible] And [illegible] control of ventilation—These [illegible] Fisher features.

BODY by FISHER

PONTIAC

Throughout these cars, there is freshness of style, richness of finish, a uniform tone of excellence. New beauty is inherent in the long, sweeping lines. The handsome "V" radiator with inbuilt screen and the massive single-bar bumpers are distinctive.

Oakland's 85 h. p. V-Eight motor, inherently quiet, delivers brilliant power. Syncro-Mesh gears make shifting practically effortless. The rigid 5-bar frame and the rugged axle are heavier, stronger.

Pontiac's big 60 h. p. motor offers economy, power, quick acceleration. A lengthened wheelbase permits spacious bodies. Brakes are large—easy, sure to operate. Unusual riding comfort is achieved by balanced design and rubber cushioning at more than 40 points.

Your Oakland-Pontiac dealer will take pride in demonstrating these fine cars. Only tremendous resources, capacity and efficiency of Oakland-Pontiac, backed by all General Motors can explain these values.

Sturdy roof construction—There is safety and strength in the bow-and-slat type roof (1) which Fisher builds into every Pontiac and Oakland closed car. (2) Rigid braces of heavy steel secure it to the body frame. And (3) its strong steel corner braces reinforce the entire body structure. Be sure to get strength, stability and safety in the roof of your car.

Strong body panels—Here are the body panels as Fisher makes them—in large, strong units with all mouldings and window reveals formed directly in the metal. Thus, the front pillar cover (1) is formed in a single piece. There are no mouldings to work loose, no exposed joints to open. Fisher panels are stamped from steel faced dies providing a smooth surface that insures a lustrous finish, free from any waves or defects. Compare this construction on a Pontiac or Oakland with other cars in their price field.

Staunch hardwood body frame—Strong, tough hardwoods, reinforced with metal braces, make up the staunch framework of Oakland and Pontiac Bodies by Fisher. This construction explains their great strength, resilience, durability, and quietness—their easy-riding comfort—their unmatched value. Acquaint yourself fully with this construction—invest in getting the value which Fisher bodies assure.

The Missing Patient.

THE doctor applied a soothing touch.

"My dear old chap," he said, "I know how you feel. I've been there myself. I've had my own practice, and I don't think I've ever come up to the standard of perfection I've set myself. But I've learned that we're all prone to make mistakes, and I don't think you're any exception to the rule. You've got to forget it, and you've got to forget it quickly. Now, I'm going to ask you a question. Don't answer it if you don't want to, but I'm sure you won't mind telling me. Is there anything about your patient that you've kept back from me?"

Carruthers looked up at the questioner.

"My patient," he said slowly, "although obviously quite young in face, had gray hair."

Fenton, forgetting himself, seized the other's shoulder.

"Where is she now?" he cried. "You've got to tell me! D'you hear? You've got to tell me!"

"A lady! Well bred, I mean?"

"Yes," came the second agreement.

Fenton rose and walked across to where the doctor sat sitting.

"Was there anything singular about her face?"

Carruthers looked up at the question.

"My patient," he said slowly, "although obviously quite young in face, had gray hair."

Fenton, forgetting himself, seized the other's shoulder.

"Where is she now?" he cried. "You've got to tell me! D'you hear? You've got to tell me!"

He was introduced to me as a Mr. [illegible] Carruthers.

"Probably a bogus name," commented the Scotland Yard official. But to the doctor, although he could have given his support to the suggestion, made no comment.

"May I proceed?" he asked.

"Please!"

"I was telling you about the suspicions I formed. I came to the conclusion that these two men had been employing me for some unlawful purpose."

Meredith glanced across at Fenton again, and his voice, when he spoke, held a note of restrained triumph.

"I am a bit of a thought-reader, Doctor," he said. "Now, suppose, without asking you to divulge any professional confidences, I got my colleague here," indicating Fenton, "to give a description of your patient. If he supplies certain details, will you either corroborate or refute them?"

"Yes. I will do that," was the reply made after some hesitation.

"Now, Fenton."

"Was the girl about 22 years of age?"

"Yes, she might be."

"May I ask his name?"

He was introduced to me as a Mr. [illegible] Carruthers.

"Do what?" he replied. "And be subjected to any examination, would be a violation of the pledge I gave the man."

"Nevertheless, I must insist upon seeing the girl."

"I'm afraid, I cannot possibly."

Meredith bowed more resignedly than Fenton would have thought possible. He himself was seething with impatience.

"I want you to understand the position, Doctor," now said Meredith. "My colleague and I have been engaged for some days past in tracking down a criminal conspiracy against a young lady, who, I am convinced, is none other than your patient. We were up against a blank wall when I

KNOX GELATINE, JOHNSTOWN, N. Y.

TOMATO JELLY (Illustration A)

(6 Servings)

2 level tablespoonfuls Knox Sparkling Gelatine
½ cup cold water
2½ cups canned tomatoes
2 tablespoonfuls onion juice
2 tablespoonfuls mild vinegar or 2 tablespoonfuls lemon juice
Few grains salt
Stalk celery
Few grains cayenne

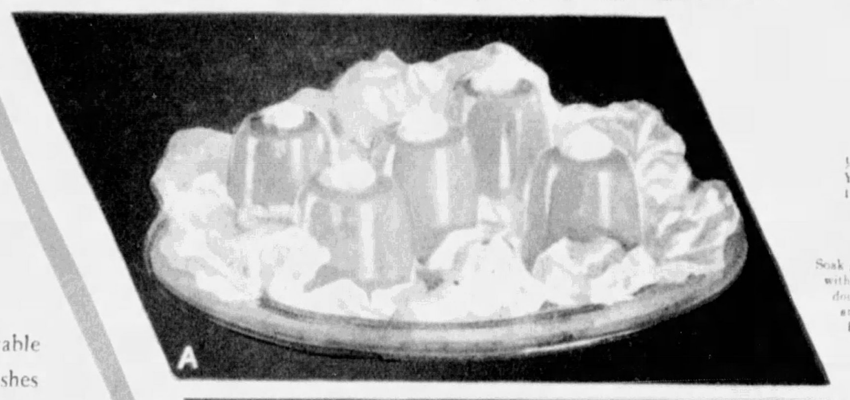
Soak gelatine in cold water about five minutes. Mix remaining ingredients, except vinegar, bring to boiling point and let boil ten minutes. Add vinegar and soaked gelatine, and when gelatine is dissolved, strain. Turn into wet molds, and chill. Remove from molds to bed of crisp lettuce leaves and garnish with mayonnaise dressing, or the jelly may be cut in any desired shapes and used as a garnish for salads or cold meats. Dressing may be forced through a pastry bag and tube.

RICE BAVARIAN CREAM (Illustration B)

(6 Servings)

1 level tablespoonful Knox Sparkling Gelatine
¼ cup cold water
¼ cup sugar
¼ teaspoonful salt
1 cup cooked rice
1 cup cream or evaporated milk
1 teaspoonful vanilla

Soak gelatine in cold water five minutes and dissolve over hot water. Add to hot cooked rice and sugar, salt and vanilla. Heat well, cool, and when it begins to thicken, add whipped cream or whipped evaporated milk. Turn into wet mold or pile in individual glasses. Serve with a fruit or a chocolate sauce.



SALMON LOAF (Illustration C)

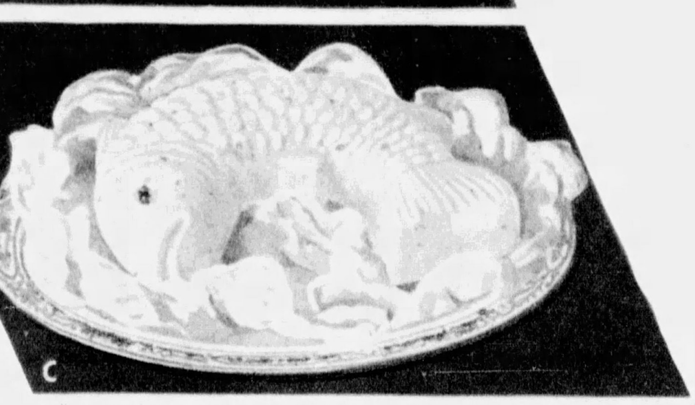
(6 Servings)

1 level tablespoonful Knox Sparkling Gelatine
¼ cup cold water
Yolks of two eggs
1 teaspoonful salt
1½ tablespoonfuls melted butter
¾ cup milk
2 tablespoonfuls mild vinegar or lemon juice
1 can salmon, tuna or crabmeat
1 teaspoonful mustard
Few grains cayenne or paprika

Soak gelatine in cold water about five minutes. Mix egg yolks, slightly beaten, with salt, mustard and cayenne, then add butter, milk and vinegar. Cook in double boiler, stirring constantly, until mixture thickens. Add soaked gelatine and salmon, separated into flakes. Turn into wet mold, chill, and remove to bed of crisp lettuce leaves.

LEFT-OVER MEAT LOAF (Illustration D)

Take two cups of any left-over stock, bouillon or diluted gravy, bring to the boiling point, and add two level tablespoonfuls Knox Sparkling Gelatine softened in one-half cup cold water about five minutes. When mixture begins to stiffen, add two cups of any cold chopped meat at hand (veal, ham, beef, or chicken). Also mold in a little red or green pepper, celery, onion if desired, or parsley. Turn into a wet mold and chill. Remove from mold and garnish with sliced cooked eggs and sliced tomatoes.



How to Use Evaporated Milk in Making Whipped Cream

WHIPPED EVAPORATED MILK

Soak one-half teaspoonful Knox Sparkling Gelatine in two teaspoonfuls cold water about five minutes. Boil the unopened can (6-ounce can) evaporated milk in a dish of water ten minutes. Remove from fire, open can and while hot stir the soaked gelatine in the can of milk to dissolve. Turn into a chilled dish and allow to become thoroughly cold. Add confectioners' sugar, and flavor to taste. Whip until stiff. Note: If allowed to stand a few minutes before serving this will thicken. If a heavy whipped cream is desired, increase the gelatine to one teaspoonful soaked in one tablespoonful cold water, and proceed as above.

Three steps to Charm

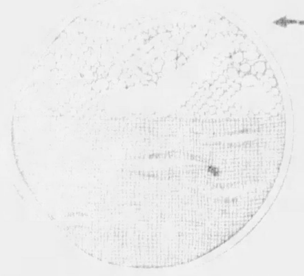
by BEATRICE FAIRFAX

"... Is often ask how to be more attractive. There are three steps to feminine charm ... (1) Buy the loveliest lingerie you can and keep it as colorful as new, because this helps you to FEEL charming. And if you feel so, you ARE.

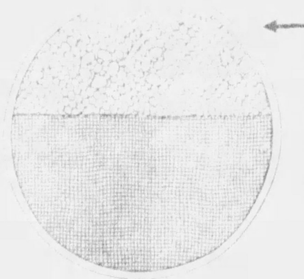
(2) Keep your stockings perfect in color and sheen, for this is a feminine detail which adds to charm. (3) Choose frocks and blouses in your most becoming colors and always keep these colors vibrant with life. Remember, men love color!

'But'—girls often say—'such dainty things fade so soon in washing!' This needn't be so if you use LUX! Lux is made to preserve CHARM of COLOR and to keep delicate things new so long that girls can afford to wear them every day."

BEATRICE FAIRFAX



Lace-trimmed lingerie washed 12 times in ordinary "good" soap — not only faded but actually worn-out looking. Lace is damaged, fibres pulled, all charm lost.



Duplicate lingerie, washed 12 times in Lux. There is no fading—lace and silk fibres are perfectly intact—the lingerie is just as colorful and exquisite as new! All its original charm retained!

"... Truly this product is woman's great aid to charm."

CHAPTER XXVIII.

The Clouds Thicken.

ployer had gone to call on ladies before, and his homecomings had always conquered him. But Leslie Braddock had exhausted that title; he was not going to marry female whose skirts had become a trifle muddy on her journey along the road of life. He was calling on Miss Brook Dangerfield of Dangerfield House. Burton had been surprised; he asked his employer how long he had known Miss Dangerfield, but Braddock laughed and said, it wasn't how long but how well, that really mattered. And the next day, Leslie Braddock had gone to Dangerfield House and had never returned alone.

and of school spirit. Finally, he thought to plead not guilty on the ground that Brook and the dead man had been secretly married. And that was all McCauley asked.

Toby was called next, and he did say that the dead man had been in the state. But in reply to McCauley's suggestion of weather, he knew what happened to people who lied in court, Toby replied that he did.

"If they're quality folks," he said to the attorney, "they commit suicide afterward."

When cautioned McCauley not to put words into Toby's mouth, the attorney, with Toby [illegible] that Brook Dangerfield was coming to Dangerfield House, and that he was speaking of Mr. Brook's son-in-law, and something. And having secured the [illegible] Brook's name, Toby was permitted to retire, chuckling.

But as he passed him, Brook smiled faintly at him, and moved her hand, and McCauley remembered, and expected him to be severe with her later. He was always severe with prisoners who were not only young and beautiful, or who made gestures which might lead the jury to believe [illegible] and remember only the gesture.

But McCauley did not need to worry. For the story which came later were quite damning enough to hurt him. There was Rosanna, who told of the telephone call; there was the story of the [illegible] Wesley Holmes; there was the matter of the three arrests for speeding, there was the fact that Brook Dangerfield secretly in her hand, yet it was known that her younger brother Daniel was in the habit of borrowing the gun, upon which the two of them would go out for whole days in the woods.

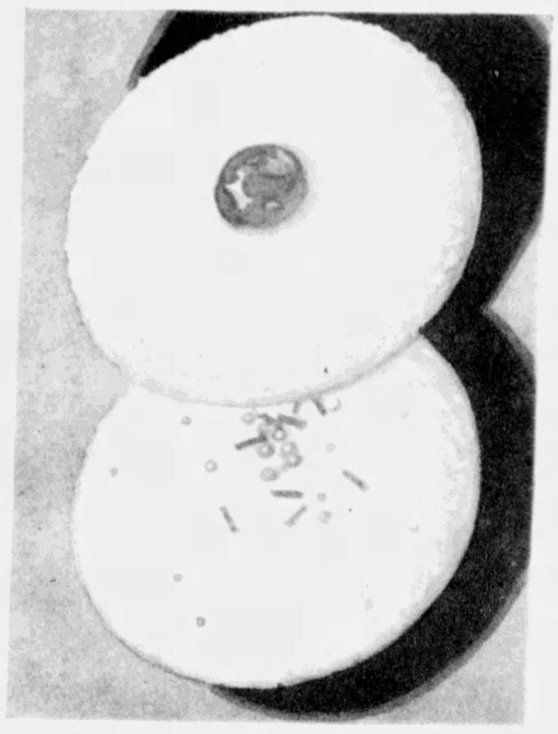
Golden Spice Cake—a gem of a dessert! So sure to be perfect with Calumet!

See Calumet act twice!

MAKE THIS TEST... Naturally, when baking, you can't see how Calumet's Double-Action works inside the dough or batter to make it rise. But, by making this simple demonstration with Calumet Baking Powder and water in a glass, you can see clearly how Calumet acts twice to make your baking better. Put two level teaspoons of Calumet into a glass, add two teaspoons of water, stir rapidly five times and remove the spoon. The tiny, fine bubbles will rise slowly, half filling the glass. This is Calumet's first action—the action that Calumet specially provides to take place in the mixing bowl when you add liquid to your dry ingredients.

After the mixture has entirely stopped rising, stand the glass in a pan of hot water on the stove. In a moment, a second rising will start and continue until the mixture reaches the top of the glass. This is Calumet's second action—the action that Calumet holds in reserve to take place in the heat of your oven. Make this test to-day! See Calumet's Double-Action which protects your baking from failure.

Date Muffins—bursting with goodness! Light as a feather!—thanks to Calumet!



Crisp! — golden! — wonderfully delicious! Calumet Sugar Cookies!

"What marvelous corn bread!" friends say—easily made with Calumet!

Send to-day! Get recipes for all these wonderful treats—they're in this new baking book!

Millions know it! Calumet's Double-Action brings sure baking success!

YOU NEED NEVER WONDER or fret about how your baking is going to turn out—when you use Calumet, The Double-Acting Baking Powder. Always be confident—your baking is bound to be perfect!

Why? . . . step into your kitchen, make the simple test described above and you'll see why—Calumet acts twice! And this remarkable Double-Action gives your baking extra protection. Calumet biscuits are light as a feather—the tenderest biscuits your pride could ever wish for. Calumet cakes are velvety-smooth—delicious! All baking turns out so beautifully with Calumet that millions of women would never think of using any other kind of baking powder. That is why Calumet is to-day the largest-selling baking powder in the whole world!

How Calumet's Double-Action works

In baking, Calumet's first action begins in the mixing bowl. It starts the leavening properly. Then, in the oven, the second action begins. It continues the leavening—steadily, evenly. Up! . . . up! . . . it keeps raising the batter and holds it high and light. Everything bakes perfectly—even though you may not be able to regulate your oven temperature with utmost accuracy.

It saves your time, too!

Another delightful advantage—Calumet's perfectly controlled leavening action permits you to store cake batters until you are ready to bake them. Batter, poured into the baking pans, covered with a damp cloth and waxed paper, may be kept in the refrigerator for several days without loss in quality.

All baking powders are required by law to be made of pure, wholesome ingredients. But not all are alike in their action nor in the amount that should be used. And not all will give you equally fine results in your baking. Calumet is scientifically made of exactly the right ingredients, in exactly the right proportions to produce perfect leavening action—Double-Action, your assurance of baking success!

And see how economical!

Convince yourself! Get Calumet at your grocer's and try the recipe given here. Notice how little Calumet the recipe calls for. The usual Calumet proportion is only one level teaspoon to a cup of sifted flour—a splendid economy which the perfect efficiency of Calumet's leavening action makes possible. . . . Mail the coupon! The Double-Acting Baking Powder

The Reluctant Dawn

By Christie Macdonald

[illegible]

Miss [illegible] could hardly [illegible] right. "Thank you, Miss Dangerfield," he said. "And now, are we [illegible] any chance, to hear what it was the man knew and wanted to sell?"

He looked at her; she looked at him.

"It is not necessary for you to know it," she said. "It is enough that what he knew was true."

"Quite right," said McCauley, and he was smiling. "I should not have asked you to tell the Court what the secret was, Miss Dangerfield, seeing that you killed later, to protect that secret."

But she saw the trap he had laid and refused to fall into it.

"I did not kill him to keep him from telling," she said. "I tried to buy him; I telephoned my sister-in-law; I telephoned Mr. Sherman."

"So you did," said McCauley, "and they were not at home. Which was a pity. But continue the story in your own way."

So she continued, to the point where she had come to the clearing and met the man, and he had taken out the gun and laid it down. [illegible]

[illegible] you get the gun and [illegible] you would shoot, and shot!"

[illegible]

[illegible] the kind of things [illegible] was saying. Yet he [illegible] them before. He had [illegible] somewhere, an earnest [illegible] which said earnest things. And suddenly, in the space of a second's coming and going, he knew!

"Was—was Brook the [illegible] girl on the boat?" he [illegible] and he clutched Leland's arm. But Leland did not, in the uproar about him, hear the question clearly, and when he remembered that Arthur had been speaking to him and asked him to repeat what he had said, Arthur answered simply that he had forgotten what it was he had wanted to know. But there was, as he said it, such a look of incredulity and horror on his face that Leland had to tell him that Brook was not lost yet.

"She is lost to me!" Arthur wanted to cry, but he did not. He sat quietly on, and when recess was declared a few minutes after, he went out with [illegible] other days of the trial, [illegible] remembering that he had held Brook in his arms, and that rain had beat down on his face as he kissed her.

They went back, but [illegible] the Judge came in and the [illegible] business got under way [illegible]. Then [illegible] the State rested.

"My poor dear girl," thought [illegible] for he saw that the jury did not look at Brook. "I am afraid to think beyond this minute."

Both sides were summing up, Adams first, and speaking brilliantly. But McCauley going, what was worse, speaking dangerously. Adams took almost an hour. McCauley took only thirty minutes. But in that thirty he laid before the jury a mass of facts so damning and black that they seemed to smother Adams' cleverness, a cleverness supported by nothing more than Brook's story itself. For McCauley painted Brook as a girl reckless, wayward, a legitimate product of a feverish age; a girl who, seeing herself disgraced and failing to [illegible] the money which would [illegible] Braddock, procured a gun and, going to the clearing, shot him down in the coldest of blood.

And having placed her within the shadow of death as irrevocably as he could, McCauley bowed, sat down, and the Judge stood to charge the twelve men on his left. When suddenly, as he was speaking, an attendant brought a note to him, and the Judge, pausing in his charge, read it and glanced up quickly.

"Open the doors," he said to the man at the back, "and let the person standing there come in."

Every head was turned as they opened the doors and as the man who had been standing outside came down the aisle and passed at last in front of the railing before the bench. There were a number that recognized him as he stood. Detectives Flynn and Flood recognized him; John Sherman, half arising with an exclamation, recognized him. McCauley himself knew him. But the man, oblivious of the stares and the exclamations, looked neither to right nor left, but only into the Judge's face.

"Put this man under oath," said the Judge, in a tremendous voice. "He has testimony to give, testimony which may be of importance."

CHAPTER XXIX.

The Reluctant Dawn.

THE man gave his name as Harlan Shannon, and then swore, as Brook had done earlier, to tell the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth.

"On the first of November," he said, "I came out of State's Prison with but one idea in my mind." He paused, went on. "That idea was to get out of the safe of Mr. John Sherman, down at Moorecroft beyond Easthampton, some papers of mine which he held, papers with which he could, at any moment he chose, send me back to prison for the rest of my life!"

There was some excitement among the spectators, and the man waited. John Sherman drew a breath; he began to see, as one sees distant light at the end of a wearisome tunnel, how it was the thing had come about.

"I had no gift for opening safes myself," went on the man, "but I knew someone who had. And that someone was Leslie Braddock, but he had got rather out of the way of doing work of that sort, because he had learned ways so much easier of making money. However, I went to him, and he agreed to try and get the papers for me. And he did. It was not a difficult matter, for John Sherman was abroad, and the house was guarded only by two old fellows who stayed to themselves pretty much in one wing."

He paused. Brook was sitting forward now; she had never taken her eyes from his face.

"He got the papers for me, this Leslie Braddock," went on the man. "But he also got something else. He got a letter!"

Still Brook never took her eyes from his face. It was as if she pleaded with him not to betray the secret of the letter, and it was as if he, without looking at her, understood and obeyed.

"It was a silly letter," said Harlan Shannon. "A silly letter written by a silly woman. But Miss Dangerfield lied when she said it was about something she herself had done, and which was disgraceful. For the letter had nothing to do with Miss Dangerfield at all. It had been written by a friend of hers, a friend whom she had been shielding."

And then, for the first time, Brook lost her quietness.

The man went on. "When Braddock gave me the papers that belonged to me," he said, "he showed me the letter, and told me he was going to keep it. He knew it was a letter capable of causing trouble between husband and wife—or woman and lover—and I think he kept it out of deviltment. But a night or so later Miss Dangerfield came into the Golden Dog with young Mr. Sherman, and something happened that nobody could have counted on, that Braddock had not counted on either. He fell in love with her!"

There was a moment—and even the Judge showed himself capable of human astonishment.

"Braddock had never seen her before?" asked the Court.

"No, never," replied Shannon. "Because he not only told me he hadn't, but he sent for the head waiter and asked her name. And then, when Mr. Sherman left the table to telephone, he sent Natanza over to ask her to dance, and she refused without, as she has told you, even looking to see whom or what she was refusing. And I think it was then that the idea of using the letter came into his head."

There was another pause. Even McCauley sat immovable, waiting for the man to go on with his remarkable story. The man went on.

"I think it was then the idea of using the letter came into his head and I think also, that at first Braddock intended to use it only to approach Miss Dangerfield, and force her to notice him. For he was a man that had never known the rebuffs of women. So he went to see her, and I went with him. But I was not worried then, not till after he had seen her and had come out of the house to where I was waiting. And it was then I saw that he was changed; he could talk of nothing but this girl with whom he had just spoken; he could talk of nothing else. He was like a man in a spell of some sort. And that was when I determined to follow him, for I knew him for what he was, with women!"

He stopped, considered, went on, quietly. "He had told me he was to meet her at the clearing at two o'clock, and that she was to bring money with her, for the letter. But I saw he was not interested in money; if she succeeded in buying the letter at all, it would be with something that was not money.

"So I went to the clearing before him and I hid in the ruins of the fireplace in the abandoned cabin. He came a few minutes after, looked about the clearing to satisfy himself no one was hidden, but he never looked into the cabin because as he began to come up the two or three broken steps into the room where I was, he saw her coming, and he forgot about going on with the search."

The man waited a bit, continued. "She told him at once that it had been impossible to reach the people who would have helped her, and she asked for more time. But he refused, and then he offered to bargain with her, and in such a way that she struck him! And it was then that he completely lost his head, and she saw what manner of man she had to deal with."

Brook had lowered her face into her trembling hands. There was in her ears a voice that was not the voice of the man on the stand. "Come, set your lips against mine, and ask me to forgive you." But after a minute she could lift her head from her hands, and listen once more.

The man had gone on: "Braddock had taken out a gun when he sat down on the porch beside her. I could see the porch clearly from where I was hiding in the fireplace. And at first his action puzzled me. For I did not know whether he had taken it out because he thought she might have someone watching them, or because, being the sort of man he was, he wanted to impress her with a sense of the cheap power he wielded over his kind. But whatever it was, he set the gun on the porch between them."

"Is the Court to understand," asked the Judge, leaning forward, "that the man Leslie Braddock took from his pocket a gun which he was carrying and laid it down just as the prisoner said?"

"Yes, she was telling the truth," said Shannon. "He put the gun down—and spoke to her insultingly, and she struck him. He had picked the gun up again by then and when he tried to take her in his arms, she pushed him and he fell, and as he fell, the gun fell also. And since she was standing and quicker on her feet, she had the gun before he could rise. But this did not stop him; he was [illegible] now. He came on, and on, and I think he could read in his face what was waiting if he reached her. But she gave him a chance, she begged him to stay where he was. But he only laughed and told her the gun was not loaded. And then he sprang and she fired."

No one had moved during the recital, no one thought of moving now that the man paused. The Judge spoke.

"Then the man, Leslie Braddock, did have on him, in spite of his fear of the number, a revolver of .38 calibre, and the prisoner killed him in self-defense, exactly as she has testified today?"

The man shook his head. "No. The gun which Leslie Braddock carried was a .45, as Natanza said it would be, and Miss Dangerfield never killed him at all! I killed him and here is the gun with which I did it!"

And he took out of his pocket and handed over to the astounded and speechless McCauley a Colt .38!

Instantly, there was uproar and indescribable confusion, but eventually the gavel prevailed and the voice of the man could be heard once more.

"Miss Dangerfield and I must have fired almost at the same instant," he said. "But she never heard my shot, because the Colt, as you see, is equipped with a silencer. And she never saw me, because she was standing with her back to the cabin and I was on its threshold. She heard only her own shot, saw Braddock fall, realized he had died, and ran away! She never knew I had been inside the cabin, she never knew her bullet had gone wild, she never knew she was innocent of murder!"

McCauley was on his feet. "May I point out that you could have protected Miss Dangerfield by merely coming out and showing yourself?" he demanded.

The man on the stand looked at him quietly and a little grim ghost of a smile was upon his face as he did so.

"It is quite clear that you did not know Leslie Braddock and

RECIPE TO DARKEN GRAY HAIR

You Can Make a Better Gray Hair Remedy Than You Can Buy.

Gray, streaked or faded hair is not only unbecoming, but unnecessary.

Anyone can prepare a simple mixture at home that will darken gray hair, and make it soft and glossy. To a half-pint of water add 1 ounce of bay rum, a small box of Barbo Compound and ¼ oz. of glycerine.

These ingredients can be bought at any drug store at very little cost, or the druggist will put it up for you. Apply to the hair twice a week until the desired shade is obtained. This will make a gray haired person look twenty years younger. It is easy to use, does not color the scalp, is not sticky or greasy and does not rub off.

PAIN AFTER EATING —A SIGN OF ACID STOMACH...

DOES discomfort after eating spoil your enjoyment of certain foods? Do you know what causes that pain after eating; what brings on sour stomach, heartburn, gas, "indigestion," sick headaches, biliousness?

An acid condition of the stomach and bowels.

Because of the way we live today, most of us need an anti-acid at times. We need something to overcome the effects of the acid-forming foods, exertion, excitement. Something to help Nature keep the digestive system properly alkaline.

The regular use of Phillips' Milk of Magnesia works wonders for most men and women. They eat well. Their food digests. Proper alkalinity permits the stomach, liver and bowels to function as they should.

Take a spoonful of this creamy, pleasant-tasting anti-acid today and for several days. See how it sweetens stomach and bowels; relieves the sick headaches, bloating, gas, biliousness, and indigestion caused by too much acid. Appetite and digestion will improve. You will feel better all over. It will be more difficult for sickness or colds to attack you.

Get genuine Milk of Magnesia. Look for the Phillips' name on the wrapper. It is always a liquid; never sold in tablet form.

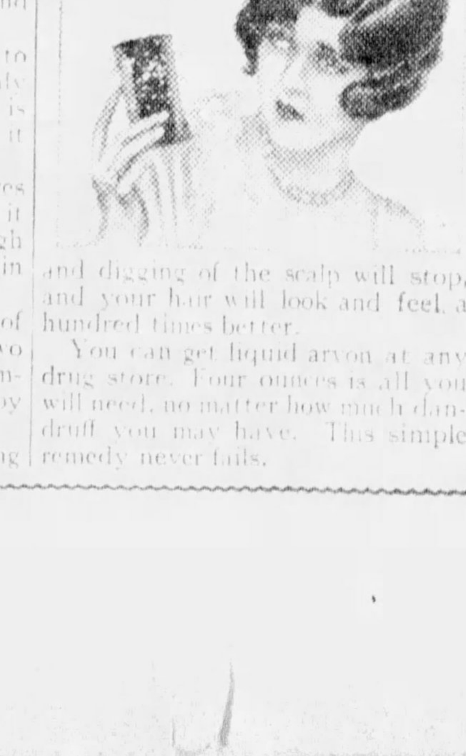
Sure Way to Get Rid of Dandruff



Girls—if you want plenty of thick, beautiful, glossy, silky hair, do by all means get rid of dandruff, for it will starve your hair and ruin it if you don't.

It doesn't do much good to try to brush or wash it out. The only sure way to get rid of dandruff is to dissolve it; then you destroy it entirely.

To do this, get about four ounces of ordinary liquid arvon; apply it at night when retiring; use enough to moisten the scalp and rub it in gently with the finger tips.

By morning, most, if not all, of your dandruff will be gone, and two or three more applications will completely dissolve and entirely destroy every single sign and trace of it.

You will find, too, that all itching and digging of the scalp will stop, and your hair will look and feel a hundred times better.

You can get liquid arvon at any drug store. Four ounces is all you will need, no matter how much dandruff you may have. This simple remedy never fails.

The Reluctant Dawn — by Hazel Christie Macdonald

"what he stood for," he said to the prosecutor. "Had I come out and 'showed myself,' as you put it, I should have made him my enemy for life—with a sure bullet from one of his men next week—next month—next year. That is what my coming out would have gained me!"

He leaned forward, for a moment silent.

"I had another reason for never letting Leslie Braddock leave the clearing alive," he said at last. "A reason which had nothing to do with protecting Miss Dangerfield, but which was connected indirectly with the unexpected necessity for protecting Miss Dangerfield. And that reason was—between the time I saw Braddock in the morning and the time I went to the cabin in the afternoon, I had found out that he had not given me all the papers belonging to me! He had kept one—a little memorandum which could, at the moment he chose to use it, send me back to prison. So I killed him. I was standing, as I told you, in the cabin door as I fired, and the surprise on his face as he got the bullet told me he had seen me and that he knew I had found out!"

He paused once more. McCauley would, perhaps, have spoken, but before he could do so Shannon went on:

"After I had fired, I stood for a moment and Miss Dangerfield stood, and I do not know which of us was the more astonished at her shot—she or I. But before I could move, could go down the little steps and speak, she did something I was quite unprepared for: she threw her gun from her and ran! And it was only at that moment, that I realized she thought she had been the one to kill Braddock. So I picked up her gun and I took from Braddock's body the letter belonging to me and the letter belonging to Miss Dangerfield and then I went away and left Braddock there in the snow.

"But what I never expected Miss Dangerfield to do, what complicated all the plans I had made, was, as I read in the papers that night, that she had confessed and given herself up!"

He stopped once more. Then spoke directly to McCauley.

"Had Miss Dangerfield not confessed, the murder of Leslie Braddock would never have been solved—either by you, or by anyone else. For my alibi had been too well built. But she did confess." McCauley began a smile, the smile of a man who regretfully sees one animal escape from a carefully laid trap and suddenly is consoled by finding that another animal has unexpectedly fallen into its place, consoled but not yet sure it is the particular animal he prefers.

"Come, come, Mr. Shannon," he said, blandly, "it is not quite reasonable to expect us to believe that, although you could have kept the world in ignorance of a crime, you come here to give yourself up for a young woman whom you have seen but twice or three times in your life. It is really—well, not reasonable!"

The man on the stand looked down at the District Attorney and a sort of slow and curious contempt became apparent in his glance.

"It would not be reasonable to you," he said. "It would not be sensible. There is a chance that it might even amuse you. But it is quite reasonable to me. For I was once a gentleman."

And, at the words, a dull red became visible on McCauley's cheekbones, as if the hot blood, which had brought him, savage and inexorable, from the waterfront of New York to political prominence, boiled up. But with an effort he restrained himself, and took refuge in that cold sarcasm which had been the weapon of his most successful forging.

"I understand that," he drawled, "I assume that when the State inflicts punishment the particular device it uses disposes of gentlemen quite as thoroughly and effectually as of those who have carelessly permitted themselves to be born into bad table manners."

But Shannon quietly shook his head, and his eyes held in their depths a perfect surety.

"Had I been in danger of losing my life to establish the innocence of this girl of the class to which I once belonged," he said, tranquilly, "I should have come back, just the same."

There was a stir and murmuring in the crowded court room, instantly stilled by the Judge's frown.

"I should have returned," Shannon went on, "for one last moment, to the code in which I was bred, and which I have forgotten, I am afraid, more times than I care to remember."

Again he paused. "But I was not in danger of losing my life, nor am I now.

"For I never intended to kill Leslie Braddock when I went to the clearing. I intended only to watch what passed between him and the ignorant girl he was meeting. And then I intended, after she had gone away, to demand of him the memorandum which he had withheld, and it was for this purpose I had taken with me the Colt .38. For one does not make demands of a man like Leslie Braddock without having with one a sure means of defense.

"But all my plans were knocked awry by what happened between him and Miss Dangerfield. I was not surprised when it happened. Still, at the same time, I had not expected it to happen and it placed me, for a minute, in a position in which I did not know what to do. I saw that Miss Dangerfield must be protected, for she was dealing with a man insane with lust and rage. Yet I could not protect her without incurring his enmity, and the consequence of incurring his enmity would be two-fold; he would never surrender the paper I wanted, but would use it to send me back to prison again. And when I had come out, he would visit upon me the last punishment for my interference—the bullet from the gun of one of his men. Mr. Natanza here, perhaps, or Roy Burton. It would be all in the afternoon's work for them, as I happen to know."

Shannon, who had once been a gentleman, leaned forward again, fixed his eyes on McCauley's.

"So I killed him!" he said slowly. "And you may hold me for carrying the gun with which I took his life—you may hold me for simple manslaughter—but no jury in the world will take my life for sending to whatever reward he has earned this rat of the underworld!

"And well you know it!"

And well McCauley did know it!

The murmur behind him, which rose and swelled and threatened to become shouting, told him. But he was on his feet, nevertheless, fighting still.

"The two letters which you took from Braddock's body," he said. "I shall ask that they be admitted to evidence."

Shannon smiled.

"My letter has been destroyed," he said. "And I shall submit it to the Court whether Miss Dangerfield's letter has any bearing on my killing of Leslie Braddock!"

And before McCauley could move, Shannon had flung upon the Judge's desk the letter that once had lain in John Sherman's safe. The Judge picked it up, opened it, and read the few brief lines which Emily Dangerfield had written the night she ran away to her death. He had never known Emily Dangerfield in life, of course, but to him, as to many others, her name had come as a symbol of something that was very golden, very beautiful, a veritable miracle of loveliness.

BEGINNING NEXT SUNDAY

Lovely Clay -:- By Maysie Greig

The Thrilling Story of an Office Cinderella Who Made Her Dreams Come True

And having read the letter, he folded it up again, carefully, as if he were folding up forever the shameful secret which had been hers.

"This letter," he spoke to the whole courtroom, "has no bearing whatever on the killing of Leslie Braddock by the man who has just confessed. I order, therefore, that the letter be returned, herewith, to the person to whom it rightfully belongs.... Mr. John Sherman, if he be in this room."

And so the letter was passed, under McCauley's irate eyes, back to John. And then, as the uproar once more threatened to gain possession of the room, the Judge discharged Brook Dangerfield from custody. But she never heard him, for she had fainted at the moment when she saw the letter put into John's hand.

When the excitement and confusion had, to some degree, died down, Arthur drew John aside.

"Do not spare me any longer," he said. "For I think I know what the letter is. It is a letter from Emily to Allan!"

John shook his head.

"Not to Allan," he corrected, with gentleness and pity. "To you."

Arthur looked at him in surprise. "What could Emily have been writing to me about?" he asked.

And then John knew that the time had come to give the letter and so, he gave it.

It was towards the evening of Christmas Day when Brook went back to the clearing, and she had come because she was afraid of it, and knew she must vanquish the fear. But when she reached the cabin, she remembered suddenly how it had offered a hiding place to the person who had saved her, and it was never to be sinister to her again.

She went up on the porch, looked in at the fireplace where Harlan Shannon had hid, at the threshold from which he had fired the shot. And when she turned, she saw that Arthur was standing outside, and on his face was the pallor of death.

"I am going away," he said to her, and it was just the ghost of the old Arthur's voice. "But before I go, I have come to ask if you can find it in your heart to forgive me?"

She was still as the snow about her; she seemed to stand there in a sort of frozen quietness.

"There is nothing to forgive," she said, at last. "Or, if there is, I forgave it long ago."

His eyes implored her.

"I have come to ask if you can find it in your heart to love me," he whispered. But still that frozen quietness was unchanged.

"There was a time when I could have died with the happiness of hearing you ask that," she told him. "But that is over and gone. You are nothing to me any more."

"You will think of me sometimes?" he asked. "And remember that I, too, have paid dearly for all my folly."

"You have paid dearly," she said, "but I shall not think of you. It shall be as if you were dead. It shall be as if you had never lived!"

And he had turned away, when Leland came into the clearing, and stood between them. He looked at Brook; he looked at Arthur. And he saw that he could send Arthur away forever, and have Brook for his own. But he saw something else, and it was that Brook, though she belonged to Leland, would love Arthur still. So Leland spoke.

"You haven't deserved her," he said to Arthur. "It is better that you go away."

"I—I—was going," faltered Arthur, and he turned. But Leland's voice stopped him.

"Go away," he said. "But come back! Come back in a year, and she shall be waiting for you here, in the place where we three stand today."

Arthur tried to speak; Brook tried to speak. But Leland had raised his hand, and was going on.

"Shall I tell you what I see waiting?" he asked, and his tone was sad, because he beheld himself in none of this; it was all for Arthur."

He went on. "I see you together, never to be separated again! Not here, but in some lovely and peaceful corner of France, perhaps. I see you sitting in a quiet room filled with candlelight, a room where the memory of this time never comes."

"And you, Leland?" cried Brook.

He smiled a little.

"I see myself Arthur's friend," he replied. "I see myself your friend, as always. And time will go on. I shall be gray, older, take to wearing rubbers. I shall come to visit you loaded down with toys and foolish gewgaws, and the laughter of your children shall be my recompense for coming."

But Brook was crying now.

"No weeping, my dear," said Leland. "Let Arthur remember you smiling!"

So Brook looked up, and there was a smile beyond the tears.

"Good-by, Arthur," she said.

"Good-by, Brook," Arthur answered.

But when she had gone with Leland out of the clearing, it was as if Arthur's very soul had gone with her. He saw that night was coming fast, and his heart rebelled for a moment at the thought of the wandering and loneliness which lay before him.

And then, turning to go, he raised his head, and perceived in the dying sky a last bit of valiant scarlet that still dared to resist the darkness. And at the sight, a timid rapture that he had thought lost forever stirred within him. He remembered that a year, be its reward a certain and a happy one, can be swifter than light in its passing!

Why Dentists Advocate This Unique Technique

The unique action of Kolynos permits the Dry-Brush Technique advocated by leading dentists as the way ... to use a dental cream full strength ... to keep the brush bristles stiff enough to clean every tooth surface and massage gums properly ... Use a half inch of Kolynos on a dry brush, morning and night ... You'll discover that Kolynos lasts longer. Teeth look cleaner and whiter.

In 3 days Teeth Whiten 3 Shades

SO long as you breathe you are in danger. Millions of germs sweep into the mouth and destroy teeth and gums. They defy the ordinary toothpaste and cause a condition none of us can overlook—Bacterial-Mouth. Its odious presence is revealed in teeth that are stained, yellow and decayed, in gums that are pale, soft and receding. But ... you need not be the victim of this deplorable condition.

Double-strength Kolynos removes Bacterial-Mouth by killing the germs that cause it. And the result is astonishing. See for yourself. Use the Kolynos Dry-Brush Technique★ for 3 days ... then note the change in the appearance of teeth and gums.

Teeth look whiter, fully 3 shades. Gums feel firmer, they are healthier. And your mouth tingles with a refreshing, clean taste.

Kolynos cleans teeth and gums as they should be cleaned. As soon as it enters the mouth, this highly concentrated, antiseptic dental cream gives you a pleasant surprise. It becomes an exhilarating FOAM that is full of life. This FOAM gets into and cleans out every tiny crevice, pit and fissure.

It quickly kills the millions of germs that cause Bacterial-Mouth—that lead to tooth decay, stain, ugly yellow and to gum diseases. (Kolynos kills 190 million germs in 15 seconds.) Moreover this FOAM keeps on working after you hang up your toothbrush. For 3 hours it continues to cleanse the teeth and purify the mouth.

That is why teeth are so easily and swiftly cleaned down to the beautiful, naked white enamel—without injury.

If you want whiter teeth free from decay and firm, pink gums—discard the dentifrice that does only half the job. Switch to Kolynos. It will win you in 3 days. Get a tube from any druggist.

It still may happen at first sight!

To think that only this afternoon he had been a very bored young man! Bored because he had promised to take his sister to the dance for Sylvia Herrold. He didn't know Sylvia—didn't want to.

And then he met her! He held her, slender, mysteriously fragrant, in dance after dance. Toward the end of the evening he guided her, against her laughing protest, to the glass-enclosed terrace.

Sylvia's long amber lashes cast a faint shadow on cheeks translucently lovely as a flushed moonstone; her provocative lips were the warm pastel of rose-quartz.

Her lovely violet eyes, while mutely pleading with him to restrain his ardor, revealed the secret that he, too, attracted her. Gently caressing her, Paul knew that Time would only increase his ardor for one as exquisite as Sylvia.

● Once, Sylvia was a sleeping beauty

Beauty often lies dormant ... it must be awakened to become a magnet to masculine interest.

It was Pompeian Beauty Powder in the alluring Nude Shade, together with Pompeian Bloom (a creamy rouge) in Medium Tint, which had vitalized Sylvia's skin.

These twin toiletries of Pompeian have been the choice of millions of women each year—among them America's most noted beauties.

The glamorous effect of this powder and rouge is no accident. Years of experimenting on living models were needed to achieve a quality and weight of powder and a blend of rouge, which would form a perfect harmony with every skin.

● Pompeian beauty is not fleeting

Pompeian Beauty Powder clings with tender tenacity to the skin ... Pompeian Rouge comes off creamily on its soft puff, spreading its fluent color into the natural tones of the skin. There are five flawless shades of powder, and six of Pompeian rouge to choose from.

● Nor is it a costly luxury

Women who use Pompeian toiletries enjoy the beauty which charms love, and at the same time the practical economy which holds it steadfast—for either powder or rouge, in generous quantity, costs but 60c.

You need not search for it—you need not accept an inferior product—Pompeian is sold at all toilet goods counters, drug stores and in 10c sizes, at 10c stores.

"The most extraordinary thing has happened, Doctor!" the Matron Cried. "That patient of yours—the Polamin case—has disappeared!"

No. 34-5 Brook Street proved to be a stately historic mansion that had recently been converted into a Nursing Home. Dr. Carruthers had been partly correct in saying that it was his Nursing Home. In company with several other physicians of repute, he had financed this private hospital and had a special ward in it. It was in this department, he explained, that the patient they were now going to interview had been left.

But as they stepped out of the lift on the second floor, a disconcerted matron met them.

"The most extraordinary thing has happened, Doctor!" the matron cried. "That patient of yours—the Polamin case—has disappeared!"

Meredith was the first to reply. The doctor looked bewildered, and was staggered.

"Disappeared?" repeated the Detective-Inspector; "what d'you mean, disappeared?"

The handsome woman in mauve uniform gave the interrogator a haughty look of surprise.

Carruthers made an explanation.

"This is Detective-Inspector Meredith of Scotland Yard, matron," he said; "although not a word must be said outside, it appears that this girl was connected with a group of criminals. It's a most appalling business. And now you say she has disappeared. But how can she have disappeared?"

"I only know, Dr. Carruthers," the matron replied, very perturbed, "that the girl is not in the building. I will call Nurse O'Regan."

At the moment the matron of one of the most fashionable nursing homes in the West End was making her startling announcement, a girl whose beautiful complexion contrasted so picturesquely with the gray curls peeping from beneath her close-fitting hat, was seated reading a copy of the Evening Sun in a popular Piccadilly tea-room.

"So it's come off," Pola murmured excitedly to herself; "Bob's got what he wanted! It was worth waiting for. And he won't forget that I was the one to give him a helping hand."

A moment later, Pola Vanessi was in a taxicab. The driver had looked at her inquiringly when he heard the address given, but, as nothing can astonish the London taxi driver for more than five seconds at a time, he had pushed in his clutch and had started off.

His passenger occupied the time through the tedious journey by picturing the joyful reunion she was shortly to celebrate. She knew Bob too well to have any fear that this man with whom he was working would cut any ice with him. Once he had the necessary information, he could deal with this side kick; he would get the jewels for himself.

And she would share them!

CHAPTER XXXIV.

The Empty Flat.

FENTON banged his fist on the table.

"For heaven's sake, say something else!" he urged.

But Meredith remained unruffled.

"What else can I say?" he asked. "At the present moment, every policeman throughout the Metropolis is on the watch for a girl answering the description of Jacqueline Coyle. It is only a question of an hour or so before some information must be sent to the Yard. I tell you, there's nothing for you to worry about. But what puzzles me is how she managed to get out of that Nursing Home without being seen. Though people suffering from sudden mental aberration—as she undoubtedly is, for this is the only explanation of her extraordinary conduct—often do the queerest things. I could tell you some stories about that."

"Please don't," said Fenton curtly; "and, for a change, suppose you let me do a little talking. I want you to check up on the position as we know it now."

"Fire away," encouraged the other.

After making every possible inquiry at the Brook Street Nursing Home, the two had returned to the Duke Street flat, and for the past half-an-hour had been discussing the most recent astonishing development with great animation. Once or twice, Fenton had threatened to lose his temper, but the unruffled good-nature of the Scotland Yard official had been able to smooth over the difficult places. Meredith could understand the terrible disappointment Fenton must have experienced an hour before.

"What we've dragged out of that fellow Carruthers amounts to this," Fenton said. "Jacqueline's father was handed certain jewels by a Russian nobleman, the Grand Duke Vladimir. He brought these jewels to Paris, deposited them somewhere, and confided this secret hiding place to his daughter. He was then murdered either by the fellow we know as the Baron or by some of his associates. According to Carruthers' statement, these jewels are now lying in a secret drawer of a lacquer cabinet, which is supposed to be in the dining room of the Coyle flat in Paris.

"From what we know, there doesn't seem to be much doubt but that the Baron and the Professor have left London to have a look at that cabinet. By this time," looking at his watch, "they are probably in Paris. The chase is over; they have won. Not that that matters two-pence to me, of course, but I'm afraid that some of the swine they left behind have got hold of the girl again. There's no doubt, to my mind, that she was kidnaped from the Saint-Paul Hospital in Paris weeks ago. Don't you see, Meredith," leaning across to the other man, "once she had given up the secret, they would try to keep her from telling anyone else the information she had passed on to them while under the influence of the drug."

"Yes," agreed Meredith; "that sounds sensible enough. But you must remember this: what information we could get at the Nursing Home seems to show that she left the place of her own accord. No one called, so that she could not have been taken away by force. My belief is that any minute now we shall get a telephone message to say that she has been found. The best thing you can do, Fenton—that is, if you're still keen on this business . . ."

"Keen? Of course I'm keen!"

"I mean keen, not so much on helping the girl, but on getting your own back on the Baron and the other fellow—is to slip across to Paris yourself tonight. What's to prevent you?" the Inspector went on. "You can rely on me to see that Miss Coyle is kept in safety once we have word about her. If you like, I'll promise that she hasn't move a step outside of Scotland Yard."

Fenton jumped up.

"That's an idea!" he exclaimed, excitement in his voice.

"D'you speak French?"

"Well enough to make myself understood, Meredith. I think I will," he continued slowly; "I'd give anything to do those two devils one in the eye. But they can't be in Paris by this time. It's too late!"

"That's not to say they've got the jewels," returned the other. "I'd go with you, only I can't get away. Or, if you like, I could send word through to the French police."

Fenton waved this suggestion aside.

"No French police for me," he declared; "I'm going to see this job through myself. That's not to say, though, I shouldn't like some help from your pals at the Surete if it was urgently needed."

He walked to the mantlepiece and pressed the bell.

Charles was greeted with acclamation.

"Oh, there you are, Charles. I haven't had a chance to say anything to you before, but I want you to know how grateful I am for what you did last night."

"It wasn't very much, I'm afraid, Mr. Fenton," answered the gentleman's gentleman adventurer.

"It was just about enough to save my life and I shan't forget it. Now, I'm off to Paris. Will you ring up the Croydon Aerodrome and see if you can get me a seat in one of the Airways' machines?"

"Very good, sir."

Charles did a half-turn and then wheeled round again.

"May I ask, Mr. Fenton, if it's anything to do with this present business?"

"Yes, Charles. But you're not coming—you've done your bit already."

Charles made a mute appeal to the Detective-Inspector, but Meredith shook his head.

"Your master is one of the determined sort, Charles," he commented. And with that the man withdrew.

Packing did not take long; in fact, within 10 minutes Fenton was out of the house.

"I'll send a message through to the Surete straight away," said Meredith, in wishing his friend good-by. "Don't run any unnecessary risks, old man. You can get all the help you want from the Paris police."

"I won't forget," was the reply; but even as he spoke Fenton determined that, so far as was possible, he was going to see this thing through alone. Up till now he had not cut a very successful figure in the business. The Other Side had had most of the laughs. It was time he began to trump some of their aces.

Dr. Pierre Laroche, of the Saint-Paul Hospital, was amiability itself.

"But certainly, monsieur," he told the Englishman who had walked into the great medical institution with so anxious an expression; "I remember the case perfectly. A beautiful English girl, with a complexion you see referred to in the advertisements, and yet with gray hair—an irresistible combination. But come, I will get all details."

The medico, who was acting as house physician, took Fenton into his private room. Here he rang a bell, in answer to which a nurse appeared. An animated conversation ensued between the two. At the end of the talk, Dr. Laroche turned to the visitor with a smile.

"The name was certainly Mademoiselle Jacqueline Coyle," he said; "she was brought here suffering from concussion and injuries received as the result of being knocked down in the street. Mon Dieu! How they drive those taxis here in Paris. . . .

"We soon discovered that her memory was faulty—purely, you understand, as the result of this lamentable accident. But in time, had she stayed with us, I feel confident that everything would have been repaired. She had a

Here's Simple Way To Actually Get Rid Of Arm And Leg Hair

That Completely Banishes Coarsened Re-growth

A Discovery That is Proving to the Wonder of the Cosmetic World That Hair Can Not Only Be Removed Instantly, But Its Reappearance Delayed Amazingly.

A new way of removing arm and leg hair has been found that not only removes every vestige of hair instantly, but that banishes the stimulated hair growth thousands of women are charging to less modern ways. A way that not only removes hair, but delays its reappearance remarkably.

It is changing previous conceptions of cosmeticians about hair removing. Women are flocking to its use. The discovery of R. C. Lawry, noted beauty scientist, it is different from any other hair remover known.

What It Is

It is an exquisite toilet creme, resembling a superior beauty clay in texture. You simply spread it on where hair is to be removed. Then rinse off with water.

That is all. Every vestige of hair is gone; [illegible]

When new growth finally does come, it is utterly unlike the old. [illegible] No stubble. No coarsened regrowth.

The skin too is left soft as a child's. No sign of pores, no enlarged pores. You feel freer than probably ever before of annoying hair growth.

Where To Obtain

It is called NEET, a preparation long on the market but recently changed in compounding to embody the new Lawry discovery.

It is on sale at all drug and department stores and beauty parlors. Costs only a few cents.

Pills Don't Cure ✦ Correct Trouble ✦ With Yeast

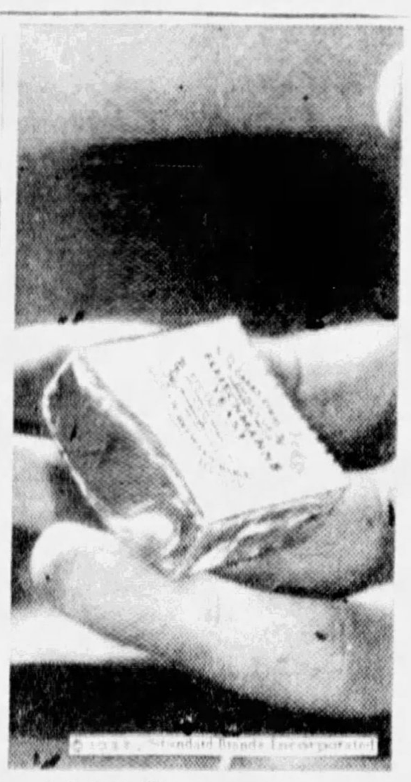
DOSING with pills soon becomes a fixed habit.

DOCTORS SAY Intestinal Fatigue is best corrected by eating yeast daily.



A FOOD, yeast acts naturally! Eat 3 cakes a day.

Pills . . . Pills . . . PILLS !

You can't cure constipation that way! Here's a simple food that brings permanent relief

IF you're tired taking pills . . . tired swallowing nasty medicines—here's good news! Here's a way to break that weakening cathartic habit. Here's a way to correct constipation naturally.

You probably know what it is. It's eating Fleischmann's fresh Yeast—the food that world-famous physicians recommend for health!

These doctors say, "If you want to correct constipation permanently, simply eat three cakes of fresh yeast every day. A food, yeast acts gently—naturally. Eat it regularly, and results are sure."

The secret is that Fleischmann's Yeast both softens the clogging waste masses in the intestines and at the same time stimulates the natural action that helps remove them regularly. Thus normal elimination is restored. Poison-breeding food residue is promptly cleared away.

Soon appetite returns with childhood's zestfulness. Digestive secretions are fostered and food digests better. Your complexion freshens. Pep returns. You are through with pills for good!

Isn't it time you tried it? Just ask for Fleischmann's Yeast at any grocery, restaurant or soda fountain. Every cake is rich in three health-giving vitamins—B, G and D. Directions are on the label.

There is nothing so captivating as soft, silky, alluring hair

Your Hair Appears Twice as Beautiful—

when shampooed this way.

Why soft, silky hair, sparkling with life, gloss and lustre—is unobtainable by ordinary washing.

SOFT, lovely, alluring hair has always been IRRESISTIBLE.

Unfortunately, beautiful hair depends almost entirely, upon the way you shampoo it.

A thin, oily film or coating, is constantly forming on the hair. If allowed to remain, it catches the dust and dirt ... hides the life and lustre ... and the hair then becomes dull and unattractive.

Only thorough shampooing will remove this film and let the sparkle and the rich, natural color tones of the hair show.

Washing with ordinary soaps fails to satisfactorily remove this film, because ... it does not cleanse the hair properly.

Besides—the hair cannot stand the harsh effect of ordinary soaps.

The free alkali in ordinary soaps, soon dries the scalp, makes the hair brittle and ruins it.

That is why women, by the thousands, who value beautiful hair use Mulsified Cocoanut Oil Shampoo. It cleans so thoroughly; is so mild and so pure that it cannot possibly injure, no matter how often you use it.

Two or three teaspoonfuls of Mulsified in a glass or pitcher with a little warm water added, makes an abundance of ... soft, rich, creamy lather ... which cleanses thoroughly and rinses out easily, removing with it every particle of dust, dirt and dandruff.

You will notice the difference in your hair the very first time you use Mulsified for it will feel so delightfully clean, and be so soft, silky, and fresh-looking.

Try a "Mulsified Shampoo" and see how your hair will sparkle—with new life, gloss and lustre.

See how easy it will be to manage and how lovely and alluring your hair will look.

You can get Mulsified Cocoanut Oil Shampoo at any drug store or toilet goods counter—anywhere in the world.

sound constitution and perfect health. But her mind, I gathered, was clouded before the accident by a great bereavement. Not that she said much, you understand, but a word was dropped here and there.

"Why did she leave you, Doctor?" asked Fenton.

The other waved his arms in an expansive gesture.

"Tiens! But it was not our fault," he exclaimed; "we should have liked to have retained Mademoiselle Coyle; as I have said, her recovery was not complete, although she was improving every day.

"But what would you? A man, of middle-age, most distinguished in appearance, calls one day and says that he is mademoiselle's fiance."

"What?" cried his listener. "She is not engaged to anyone!"

"A thousand pardons! But how could I tell then that this was a lie? This distinguished gentleman has a wonderful car at the door, and he says he has called to take his sweetheart for a drive. That was why we allowed mademoiselle to leave. It was understood, of course, that she would return within a couple of hours—but we saw her no more."

"Didn't she raise any objection to going with this man?" demanded Fenton, who was positive in his own mind that the so-called fiance was none other than the Baron Bela Szanto.

"So well as the nurse, whom you have just seen, can remember, mademoiselle appeared delighted at the prospect of driving in the open air."

"Well, I'm ——!" declaimed the visitor.

"Pardon, monsieur?"

"Oh, nothing. Thanks for all you've done, Doctor. By the way, I wish to confirm the address at which Mademoiselle Coyle was living when she was admitted to hospital."

"I will get it you quickly."

Within another minute, Fenton, supplied with this important information, was on his way through the main hall of the building.

Dr. Laroche shook hands with him cordially at the hospital entrance.

Fenton hurried directly to the address.

No. 242 Rue de Marnay proved to be a typical block of Paris flats. The Coyle apartment, Fenton had been told at the Saint-Paul Hospital, was on the second floor.

He stood for a moment looking up at the window which commanded a view of the street. Strange that so much excitement should end in such a prosaic spot. For the Rue de Marnay was utterly commonplace. It had such a completely respectable atmosphere as to be thoroughly bourgeois. An abode for bank-clerks, solicitors and others following orthodox paths in life, but certainly not a habitation for a world adventurer such as Colonel Lorymer Coyle must have been. Perhaps he lived in such surroundings because of his daughter. Yes, that would be it. Taking great risks himself, he preferred safety for his child.

The concierge met him as he entered the main hall.

"Monsieur?" asked the man.

Fenton became as frank as possible.

"My name is Fenton," he said; "I am an Englishman from London, and I have called to make inquiries about a friend of mine, Mademoiselle Coyle, who, I understand, used to live here with her father."

At the mention of the word "Coyle," the concierge became expansive in turn.

"I regret to have nothing but sad news, monsieur," he replied. "Alas! Monsieur Coyle is dead—he was found in the Seine some weeks ago. Some said," he continued, lowering his voice to a whisper, "that Monsieur Coyle had enemies, and that it was through these he met with his death. In any case, it was a very bad business. Hushed up by the authorities, I believe, because of certain influences at work. Perhaps monsieur will understand?"

Fenton nodded to this highly-intelligent Frenchman of the working-class.

"I heard something of the affair, while in London," he replied; "it is not of Monsieur Coyle, however, but of his daughter, that I wish to inquire."

The man intimated by an eloquent gesture that he was again the bearer of bad news.

"After the tragedy, monsieur, came a mystery. Mademoiselle Coyle disappeared—the day after her father's body was found. It was said that she had been taken to hospital as the result of an accident, but beyond that, we heard nothing."

"Who is living in the flat now?"

"No one, monsieur. It has been empty for several weeks. After a fortnight, the landlady, not receiving any rent, ordered all the furniture to be sold."

"Are you sure of this?" exclaimed the astonished Fenton.

"Of a certainty, monsieur. I, myself, was at the sale. I bought one or two small articles—out of sentiment, monsieur understands."

"What happened to the lacquer cabinet?"

The man scratched his head.

"The lacquer cabinet, monsieur? Ah!"—as recollection came to him swiftly—"that was purchased by a dealer on behalf of the Comte de Goebbels."

"Where does this man live?"

"In his chateau at Vaquery, monsieur."

"Where's that?"

"It is but a short distance from Paris, monsieur—say twenty-five kilometres. Can I tell monsieur anything else?"

"You have said enough!" was the rejoinder.

CHAPTER XXXV.

The Comte de Goebbels Has a Visitor.

THE Comte de Goebbels was a short, rotund-figured man whose sole claim to distinction, apart from his pedigree—he was descended on his father's side from an illustrious Belgian family—was a distinct flair for acquiring rare and beautiful examples of furniture and objets-d'art. The majority of these purchases, which were made either by the Comte personally or through the numerous agents he employed, were taken to the Chateau Goebbels at Vaquery, which is but a short motor drive from Paris.

This immensely wealthy connoisseur had other places, of course—a villa at Cimiez, on the French Riviera, an apartment in Paris, and a house in Brussels—but it was at the Chateau that he spent most of his time, and it was here he liked to be surrounded by his most notable specimens.

It was the habit of the Comte to sit in his library for an hour after the morning meal, which he took in the English fashion—smoking a cigar and reading Le Matin. The practice had become so agreeable after many years that it was distinctly understood among the staff at the Chateau that their master was on no account to be disturbed at this time of the day unless something quite out of the ordinary had happened.

Nevertheless, on this particular morning, when the Comte's cigar was not more than half-way consumed, the library door opened and Hippolyte, the major-domo at the Chateau, entered.

"This gentleman has called, M. le Comte," he announced; "he says he has an appointment with you."

His master took the extended card, gave a brief glance at it, and then the frown which had gathered on his face vanished to give place to a smile.

"Yes, that is correct," he replied in a precise, somewhat high-pitched voice; "please show Monsieur Edwards in here at once."

Like all collectors, M. le Comte was not averse to achieving a little publicity for his treasures. And so it happened that when, a few days before, a writer giving the name of Edwards and using the Hotel Meurice notepaper, had sent a letter to the owner of the Chateau Goebbels, the Comte had replied in the affirmative.

The connoisseur's vanity had been agreeably flattered. The request made in the letter was that the writer, who styled himself the travelling special correspondent of the "Famous Homes" Magazine of London, should be allowed to pay a visit to the Chateau for the purpose of describing, for the benefit of the readers of his magazine, the wonders that were stored therein.

"I should like, if it is possible, to bring a camera, and take a number of photographs," Mr. Edwards had added.

The reply of the proud owner had been very agreeably expressed.

"I shall be delighted," the Comte had written in his own hand, "to welcome you and to take you on a personal tour through the Chateau. I trust you will not be disappointed."

This, then, was the visitor whose card Monsieur le Comte was now holding.

Two minutes later, a middle-aged man of spare build, walking with the characteristic briskness of the professional journalist, stepped into the spacious library. He carried a large camera in his left hand.

"This is awfully good of you, M. le Comte," the journalist said in perfect French after they had been seated. "I scarcely hoped that you would be so kind."

The connoisseur bowed.

"But it is delightful to meet one so interested in beautiful things," he replied encouragingly.

Felix Edwards shook his head in deprecatory manner.

"I don't want you to be misled," he said; "I am a professional writer—and I hope I shall prove to you that I can do that part of the job well—but it is useless for me to attempt to pose as an expert on furniture. For the technical descriptions I shall have to rely upon you, M. le Comte."

"I quite understand." The speaker's eyes twinkled. "It's too much to hope, no doubt, that you professional writers should have expert knowledge of every subject with which you deal. Perhaps, before we make a start, you would tell me something about your magazine. I should very much like to see a copy."

"I will get some sent on to you from the London office," said the caller quickly. "It was very remiss of me, I confess, not to have done so before. We have only published a few numbers," he went on, "and those have dealt exclusively with the famous homes of England. But so much success has attended the publication of these first issues, that the management have decided to embrace the whole of Europe. France, the country of marvellous chateaux, is to receive attention first. Your reputation as a connoisseur of the arts, M. le Comte, is well-known in London. That is why the first visit I make in France is to see your wonderful home."

The listener acknowledged the compliment by moving towards the door.

"I will give you all the assistance possible, Monsieur Edwards," he said.

To anyone sufficiently interested, the tour of inspection which followed would have been an unique experience. But Mr. Felix Edwards, perhaps because of his self-confessed lack of technical knowledge, now and then allowed himself to express facial boredom, but this only when his host's back was safely turned, and it was not until a small drawing room on the first floor of the Chateau was reached that he became extremely alert.

Against one wall was placed an exceedingly handsome lacquer cabinet. It was about five feet high, and its deep, rich red coloring made it most attractive to the eye.

"That's a nice piece, Comte," remarked the representative of "Famous Homes."

"Yes, it is." The owner opened the two folding doors.

"I have not had this very long," he announced; "it came from Paris. Perhaps you have heard of the Englishman, Colonel Lorymer Coyle—the world-adventurer who had such a romantic career?"

Anyone watching Felix Edwards closely would have witnessed a singular thing: the journalist, unseen by his host, was giving himself a series of little pats on the back with his left hand.

"I seem to remember the name," he said casually; "wasn't that the man who was mixed up with the Revolution in Russia?"

"Yes, I believe he was. There were some rather ugly stories about his death, which occurred a couple of months or so back. His body was found in the Seine. It had been badly mutilated. This cabinet was among the things that were sold at his flat recently. One of my agents happened to attend, quite by chance, and thinking I should be interested, bought the piece. It's rather a fine specimen."

The owner proceeded to pull out a number of drawers that were in the center, and plunged into a wealth of technical detail which was so much Greek to the listener.

He was still expatiating when the journalist made an exclamation.

"If it's as valuable as all that, I should like to make special mention of it in the article," he said, "and would it be possible to take a photograph?"

"But certainly."

Edwards looked round for his apparatus, and then made a clucking sound.

"Do you know, Comte, I have been so interested in your talk that I've left my camera somewhere."

The aristocrat immediately made an offer.

"I will fetch it for you," he said; "I expect you left it in the larger drawing room just now."

"Well, it's awfully decent of you," remarked the Englishman; "I would go myself, but I should be afraid of losing my way."

"Please don't mention it. You can examine the cabinet with more detail while I am away."

This was exactly what the visitor proceeded to do immediately he was alone. And, from a person who had formerly shown a great deal of abstraction, he now changed into a man mercurially alive.

Pulling a small piece of paper from a pocket, he consulted this, and then, running his hand up the righthand side of the cabinet, commenced to search for the small spot which was the real object of his visit.

While so engaged, the door opened quietly.

Edwards did not notice that the Comte had returned until Goebbels spoke:

"I met my butler, bringing the camera, Monsieur Edwards," he said. And the journalist, in spite of his sangfroid, started violently.

"I didn't hear you come in,"

Don't risk daintiness

this sanitary protection deodorizes completely

Kotex not only deodorizes, but it is softer, more absorbent, more comfortable.

DON'T sacrifice your feminine charm one single day. Kotex protects when daintiness is especially difficult.

All through every Kotex pad, there is a wonderful deodorant. This deodorant is your protection. It is safe and gentle ... soothing, even ... yet deodorizes as long as the pad is worn.

Meantime Kotex gives a degree of comfort that seems almost miraculous. This is largely due to its unique filler—Cellucotton (not cotton) absorbent wadding.

Stays soft and delicate

Kotex keeps its original delicacy an amazingly long time, because Cellucotton absorbs laterally and away from the surface distributing moisture throughout the entire pad.

The round, tapered corners make this pad always inconspicuous. And you dispose of it, you know, just like tissue ... doing away with unpleasant laundering. It is adjustable, because of the layer construction—can be changed to suit changing needs. You wear it on either side, with no danger of embarrassment. Ask today for "a package of Kotex" at any drug or department store.

● triplets, age 2 years, 3 months

● more proof that children take cod-liver oil willingly—this emulsified way

AMAZING!—yet it's true. Here is proof—real living proof that there is a way to make children take cod-liver oil—without a struggle.

Recently a Scott's Emulsion reporter called on Mrs. A. Gentily, 11 Wheeler St., Montclair, N. J., mother of the lovely triplets pictured here.

"Yes," she told us brightly, "I certainly do know how hard it is to make children take cod-liver oil. And I'll be glad to have my triplets try Scott's Emulsion of Cod-Liver Oil" ... Each youngster took a spoonful. "It's good," said Philip. "I like it," said Frances. "Nice," said Ann.

Pleasanter to take—but that isn't all!

Pale, thin, run-down children—they need cod-liver oil. Give it to them the pleasantest way—give them Scott's Emulsion.

Scott's Emulsion hasn't that strong "fishy" taste. It doesn't upset even delicate stomachs. It brings you purest, Norwegian cod-liver oil in its pleasantest form—a perfect emulsion. A form that makes it easier to take—easier to digest. Almost immediately, the body absorbs the health-giving vitamins—and the assimilation is complete. You get more good out of Scott's Emulsion and you feel the benefits quicker.

Scott's Emulsion is rich in vitamin A, the disease-resisting vitamin. It is rich in vitamin D, the sunshine vitamin that prevents rickets. It also contains vital mineral elements that aid in forming sound bones and teeth. This gives Scott's Emulsion a special advantage for growing children, infants, nursing and expectant mothers. Get Scott's Emulsion of Cod-Liver Oil to-day, at your druggist's. Watch cheeks grow rosy. See youngsters gain new weight and pep.

Now! a Lip Rouge That Lasts All Day!

A French Discovery that Takes the Bother Out of Make-up. No Caking, No Drying, No Unsightly "Lipstick Line" —You Make up But Twice a Day Instead of Every Hour!

Louis Philippe, temperamental French colourist, who has made make-up an art and about whom all Paris is talking.

You make up—once a day instead of every hour as before. Your lips are new, natural—yet color-true and smart.

A WAY has been found that not only gives a perfect lip make-up quicker and easier than any way known before, but that HOLDS perfectly all day long. Instead of making up every hour, you make up only once or twice a day!

It's a French idea, of course. And in both France and America it is rapidly changing present ways of make up.

The creation of Louis Philippe, temperamental colourist, whom all of Paris follows in the art of make-up, it banishes all smearing, all caking and drying and ends completely the unsightly "lipstick line" most women complain of a few minutes after making up.

WHAT IT IS

It is called Angelus Rouge Incarnat and comes as probably the greatest thing to a permanent make-up ever discovered. It is different from any American rouge you have ever seen, though its form is the same.

You carry it in the same way, and it QUICKLY AND EASILY gives a color to the cheeks that is amazing in contrast to the usual separate lipstick and rouge, both in a variety of different colors.

Then you gain the perfect Parisian make up of today. But it lasts for hours.

No more time out for constant touching up. No more making up and taking off, smearing and self-consciously smoothing the "line" you cannot even feel.

WHAT IT COSTS IN THE STORES

Already introduced and doing great business under the name of Angelus Rouge Incarnat in Canada, Ordinary lipstick form, and in the charming Little Red Box. Most women prefer the box in different colors. Same price, 75c. All the rouges.

Many women have perfectly gorgeous eyes," says this lovely film star, "but they don't let others know it. That's because their eyes are not properly shaded. I think a woman does her eyes an injustice by not highlighting them when it is so easy with Delica Brow lash and brow beautifier. The tiniest bit on lashes and brows will instantly give your eyes a sparkle you never dreamed they had."

Waterproof — Smartproof

Delica Brow, the famous lash-and-brow dressing, does not burn or irritate the eyes, waterproof, too; one application lasts all day. In cake or liquid, black or brown, 75c.

Stiffness in neck muscles, with that aching, "pulling" pain, is promptly relieved by BAUME BENGUE (pronounced Ben-Gay).

Applied freely, rubbed in well, and covered with flannel, the powerful ingredients penetrate deeply into the tissues, lessening congestion, easing spasm, soothing irritated nerves, bringing rest and comfort. Good for every ache and pain. Insist upon the original.

Hollywood's

Make-Up Secret?

Would You Like to Be More Beautiful Than You Really Are?

Max Factor, Hollywood's Make-Up Genius, reveals the Secret, and offers you a priceless Beauty Gift. See coupon below.

HOLLYWOOD holds a make-up secret . . . a new discovery in cosmetics which means new beauty, new charm and fascination to you and every women. This secret is a new kind of make-up based on cosmetic color harmony, the discovery of Max Factor, Filmland's genius of make-up.

Blonde, Brunette or Redhead?

"Cosmetics — powder, rouge, lipstick and other make-up essentials — must be in color harmony, if beauty is to be emphasized naturally," says Max Factor. "Off colors ruin the life-like effect and detract from beauty. The different types in blondes, brunettes and redheads must have an individual color harmony in make-up to bring out personality as well as alluring beauty."

Scores and scores of feature pictures . . . millions of feet of film . . . have revealed to you the magic of make-up by Max Factor. Leading stars . . . Laura La Plante, Jeanette Loff, Joan Crawford, Renee Adoree and many others have given you a glimpse of the faultless beauty to be gained with make-up in correct color harmony.

And now, Max Factor has produced a make-up for day and evening use, based on his famous discovery . . . cosmetic color harmony. Adopted almost universally by leading screen stars, Max Factor's Society Make-Up caused a sensation in Hollywood . . . and it will be a beauty revelation to you.

Suggestions for Emergencies

By Mary Lee Swann,

The Well-Known Writer and Lecturer on Cooking.

Fruit Gelatin (For 100).

DISSOLVE 1 large package quick setting lemon gelatin and 1 large package quick setting orange gelatin in 4 quarts cold water. When mixture begins to congeal add any desired sliced or shredded fruit. Chill and serve with whipped cream.

Coffee Cream.

ADD 3 tablespoons coffee to 1 cup milk and scald. Let stand 10 minutes. Strain through cheesecloth. Chill. Beat 1 cup cream until stiff, adding 2 tablespoons sifted powdered sugar and the chilled coffee mixture gradually. Mix well and flavor with $\frac{1}{2}$ teaspoon vanilla. This may be used as a cake filling if it is to be used immediately.

Broccoli on Toast.

PICK over and wash 1 bunch broccoli. Scrape if necessary. Cook in boiling salted water until tender. Cut into individual servings and arrange on 6 or 8 slices of toast. Add 1 teaspoon onion juice and 2 sifted hard cooked eggs to 2 cups well seasoned white sauce. Pour over the broccoli. Serve immediately.

Luncheon Carrots.

COOK 1 quart diced carrots in boiling salted water until tender. Drain well. Add 1 teaspoon grated onion, 1 tablespoon chopped celery, 1 tablespoon chopped pimientoes and, if desired, 2 teaspoons finely chopped parsley, to 2 cups of well seasoned white sauce. Pour over the carrots. Serve immediately.

Vegetable Souffle.

TO 3 well beaten egg yolks add 2 cups well seasoned white sauce. Add 1 teaspoon onion juice and 1 cup cooked vegetable pulp (pressed through potato ricer or sieve) and when well mixed fold in 3 stiffly beaten egg whites. Turn into a buttered baking dish. Set in a pan of hot water and bake in a moderately hot oven, or at about 375 degrees, for 45 minutes.

Steamed Sweet Potato Pudding.

MIX and sift $1\frac{1}{2}$ cups pastry flour, 3 teaspoons baking powder, $\frac{2}{3}$ cup sugar, $\frac{1}{4}$ teaspoon each, cloves, allspice and cinnamon and $\frac{1}{2}$ teaspoon salt. Mix $\frac{1}{3}$ cup strained orange juice with $\frac{1}{4}$ cup melted butter and 1 well beaten egg. Combine with the dry ingredients. Add $\frac{1}{2}$ cup warm mashed sweet potato. Add $\frac{1}{3}$ cup raisins, $\frac{1}{3}$ cup broken pecan meats and mix thoroughly. Fold in $1\frac{1}{2}$ ounces chocolate, melted over hot water. Pour into large greased mold, cover closely and steam $2\frac{1}{2}$ hours. Serve warm with cream, slightly sweetened and flavored with a suggestion of nutmeg.

Economy Beans.

SOAK $1\frac{1}{2}$ cups dried lima beans over night in cold water. Drain and cover with boiling water. Add 1 sliced onion and simmer until tender. Drain, add $\frac{1}{2}$ teaspoon salt, $\frac{1}{2}$ cup shredded celery, 2 tablespoons minced green pepper, 1 cup thick tomato soup, $\frac{1}{2}$ cup water or stock, 2 tablespoons melted fat, a few grains pepper and salt to taste. Pour into a greased casserole, sprinkle with $\frac{1}{3}$ cup buttered bread crumbs and bake in a hot oven, or at about 400 degrees, for about $\frac{1}{2}$ an hour. Garnish with a crisp sprig of parsley.

Gingerbread with Coffee Cream.

MIX $\frac{3}{4}$ cup brown sugar, [illegible] cup black molasses and [illegible] cup melted shortening. Add [illegible] well beaten eggs. Mix [illegible] $2\frac{1}{4}$ cups flour, 2 teaspoons [illegible], 2 teaspoons ginger, [illegible] spoons cinnamon, $\frac{1}{2}$ teaspoon cloves, $\frac{1}{2}$ teaspoon nutmeg [illegible] $\frac{1}{2}$ teaspoon baking powder. Add to the first mixture, [illegible] thoroughly. Add 1 cup boiling water and beat vigorously. Turn into a buttered shallow pan and bake in a moderately hot oven, or at 350 degrees, for 30 or 40 minutes. Serve warm with coffee cream.

"Such rich, safe suds!" says Mrs. A. L. Doerfer of Knoxville

"I can't imagine using anything but Rinso in my washer. It whips into rich, safe suds so quickly—loosens every particle of dirt—and rinses out again in a flash. It saves lots of work, and gets the clothes much whiter. I like it for dishes, too. My, how it loosens grease!"

MRS. A. L. DOERFER,

Safe suds—wonderful in washers

Rinso is safe for the finest cottons and linens. The best laundries use it. Its creamy suds wash white clothes whiter—colored clothes brighter.

Great in washers, too; the makers of 39 famous washers recommend it. Economical. Gives twice as much suds, cup for cup, as lightweight, puffed-up soaps. Get the BIG package.

Built to resist cold—

THE NEW "CRACK-PROOF"

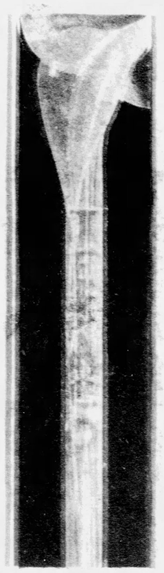
TEXACO MOTOR OIL

Like the huskies of the far north this new crack-proof Texaco is built to resist cold. At the first command of the driver this remarkable new oil leaps into action. It is alert and free-flowing even under extremes of winter weather that quickly put less hardy oils to sleep.

Oils not specifically refined to resist cold take a heavy toll in engine wear each winter. The paraffin wax congeals. The "oil" becomes thick as grease. Crankshafts and pistons must plow through a clinging, non-fluid mass — metal grates against unprotected metal — till the congealed oil is thawed out by the very heat and friction it is supposed to prevent.

The new crack-proof Texaco is a perfect cold-weather oil. It is free from paraffin wax—free from cold-sensitive impurities. "Frost-proof" as well as crack-proof, it delivers more miles per quart and more effective lubrication under every driving condition, hot or cold.

This winter give your car complete protection. Drive in where you see the Texaco Red Star with the Green T. Fill your crankcase with the correct grade of this new crack-proof Texaco Motor Oil — then listen to the sweeter sound of your quieter engine.



Make this winter test yourself

Take a bottle of the new crack-proof Texaco Golden Motor Oil and let it stand outdoors some cold night. In the morning invert the bottle. Watch the bubble rise. Notice how freely the clear golden oil flows. The new crack-proof Texaco flows freely when less properly refined oils are thickened hard as grease by cold. Texaco is made to resist cold. It is "frost-proof" as well as crack-proof.

FIRST INTERNATIONAL FOURSOME. After the Restoration, King James II, of England, then Duke of York, was sent to Edinburgh, Scotland, in 1681-82 as commissioner of the King to parliament. The Duke accepted a challenge from two English noblemen for an International foursome match for a very large stake, and chose for his partner one "Johne Patersone," a shoemaker. The Duke and Edinburgh shoemaker are herewith pictured in their historical match, which they won easily, the shoemaker building a house with his share of the winning money. A historical monument was erected in Edinburgh, and still stands in "Golfer's Land" as a tribute to the Duke of York's golf prowess. Note the difference between golf etiquette of the seventeenth century and that of today—few linksmen will permit a man to stand directly behind the line of their stroke while in the act of playing. The artist gives a true description of golf's finer points, the player about to strike the ball, probably the shoemaker, being truly represented for grip and stance. The scene otherwise is little different from that to be found on almost any golf course in the country today during the course of the summer season.

Left: "Tehuanos" is the title of this oil painting by Diego Rivera, in the Exhibition of Mexican Art, at the Carnegie Institute, which continues until February fourth. Diego Rivera is the foremost of the contemporary Mexican artists. He is best known for his murals around the patio of the Ministry of Education in Mexico City. The title of the painting refers to the inhabitants of Tehuantepec, a Mexican town. It describes, in a very decorative and colorful way, a moment in the dignified dance termed "Sand Unga." This painting was loaned by Dr. James Murphy, of New York.

"TWO BOYS."

Right: "Two Boys" is the title of this small oil painting, done on tin, and is also the work of Rivera. It is a quaint, simple, realistic and straightforward portrait of two Mexican children done with sympathy and skill by this well-known artist. The painting was loaned by the Weyhe Galleries, of New York City.

NEW FACES FOR OLD
YOUTH AND BEAUTY AT ANY AGE...

BEFORE

AFTER

How easily they can be yours by the five-angle FACIAL LIFT! (Not a beauty parlor or peeling treatment). Permanent, immediate results. Makes you look 10 to 25 years younger. Smoothes away wrinkles...restores firm contour to cheeks and chin... lifts loose skin...makes scrawny necks lovely. Double chin, puffy eyes, age lines, scars, acne marks, ill-shaped noses and ears—all corrected quickly and painlessly by highly skilled specialists. Thousands have secured youthful beauty this positive way.

Consultation FREE and invited. Write or call today for FREE illustrated Book No. 601.

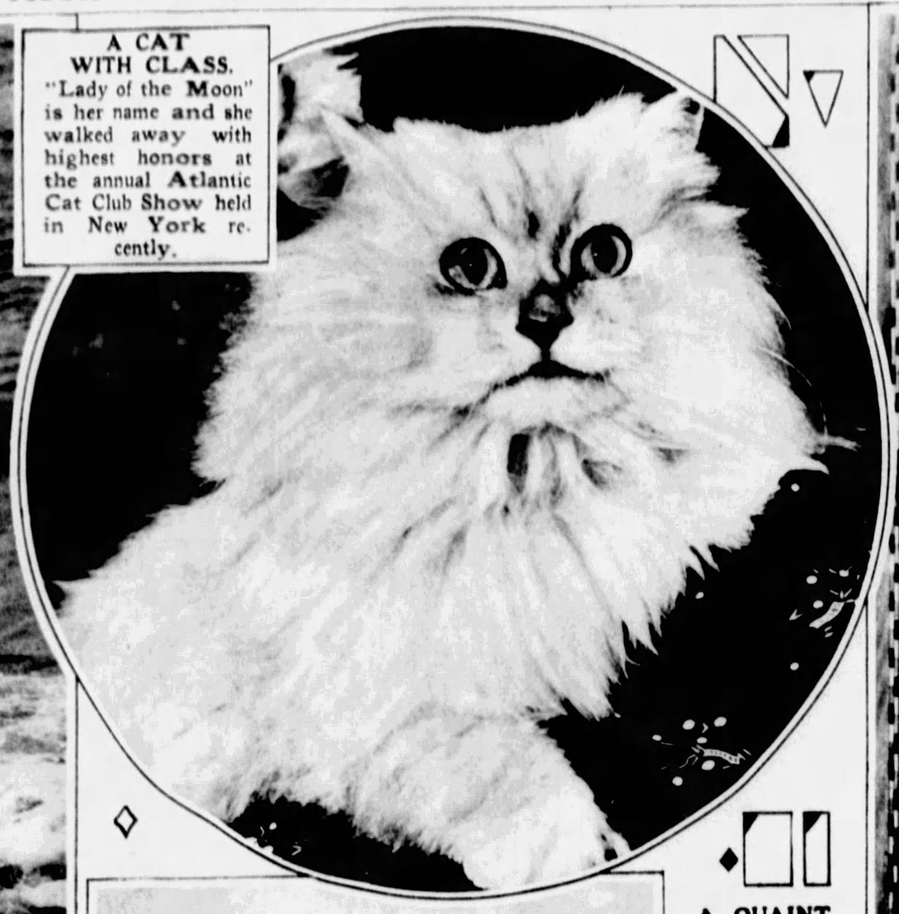
NEW WATER SPORT. This game of volley ball, played in the surf at Venice, Cal., is not as simple as it looks. The "Mermaids" won by a mere point over their opponents, "Neptune's Daughters," and were helped by a huge wave which rolled in at just the crucial moment.

A CAT WITH CLASS.
"Lady of the Moon" is her name and she walked away with highest honors at the annual Atlantic Cat Club Show held in New York recently.



A QUAINT MOLESKIN CAPE.
Right: Ona Munson, screen star, favors this smart outfit, which happily unites the quaintest kind of a brief moleskin cape with a plain wool frock in this costume of both simplicity and sophistication.

REPLICAS.
Above is pictured a reproduction of the Temple of Angkor-Vat, one of the seven architectural wonders of the world and at left Icelandic fisher huts and Tunisian village, which will be features of the International Colonial and Overseas Exposition at Paris from May to October. An actual size replica of Mt. Vernon will be the main United States exhibit.

COLD AND QUIET.
